A Search For 'True Security'

PASA Speaker Calls For Local Food, Local Decisions

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — The security of our food supply today depends on farming and distribution methods that are driven by a highly unstable international oil trade.

That is not true security, according to Mark Ritchie, keynote speaker at the annual Farming for the Future conference put on by the Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture (PASA).

"Local Food Systems, Local Decisions In Search Of True Security" was the theme of the two-day event.

Ritchie outlined how the U.S. relies almost entirely on petroleum to grow and distribute food within an industrialized system, and how this dependence has led our country to a place of vulnerability.

But Ritchie also spoke about his vision of independent farmers and entrepreneurs reclaiming the food supply and "renewing the countryside" through methods of locally-based production, marketing, and distribution. Those things are already happening across the U.S., Ritchie said, with the work of PASA serving as an example.

About 1,200 people attended the conference, including farmers and others interested in sustainable farming and food supplies. Guests included Dennis Wolff, the new Pennsylvania secretary of agriculture; Robert Steele, Penn State dean of agriculture; and Cheryl Tevis, farm issues editor at Successful Farming Magazine.

Ritchie is president of the Institute for Agriculture and Trade Policy and serves on the board of the Minnesota Institute for Sustainable Agriculture. A native of GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — Even though snow still has an icy grip on Pennsylvania, producers couldn't help thinking about spring planting and next year's crop as they gathered at the Holiday Inn in Grantville for the 2003 Corn and Soybean Conference.

Top placings in the classes are in a related story on page A24.

More than 100 producers and industry representatives attended the event sponsored by the Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association, the Pennsylvania Soybean Board, and Penn State Cooperative Extension.

Dr. Peter Bordi, assistant professor, School of Hotel, Restaurant, and Recreation Management, Penn State, discussed a soy recovery drink developed on funds from Pennsylvania Soybean Promotion Board grant.

The OLD FARMER'S THIS WEEK WITH ALMANAC

FEBRUARY 17-23, 2003

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY (OBSERVED), FEB. 17

FEBRUARY IS FOR PRESIDENTS

Officially, George Washington's birthday is honored on the third Monday in February (February 17 this year), although his actual birthday is February 22. Abraham Lincoln was born on February 12, and this month was also a time of mourning for the Lincoln family. On February 20, 1862, Abraham Lincoln's 11-year-old son, William, died at the White House. Abraham and his wife, Mary Todd Lincoln, had four boys, but only Robert Todd Lincoln survived to adulthood.

My politics are short and sweet like the old woman's dance. –Abraham Lincoln 16th U.S. president (1809–1865)

TIP OF THE WEEK

☞ Studies indicate that slow background music at mealtimes helps people eat more slowly and consume less.

MAPLE MOUSSE

1/4 cup water
1 package unflavored gelatin
3/4 cup maple syrup
3 eggs, separated
1/4 cup sugar
1 cup whipped cream

Place water in a double boiler. Sprinkle with gelatin and let stand until softened. Stir in maple syrup and egg yolks, then cook over simmering water, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens slightly. Remove from heat, transfer to a cool bowl, and refrigerate until slightly thicker (at least 15 minutes). Beat egg whites, gradually adding sugar. Fold beaten egg whites and whipped cream into the cooled mixture. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

Makes 4 servings

Green Banking?

A few weeks ago we received an e-mail informing us of a new grassroots phenomenon known as "green banking."

It's a movement in which credit unions, banks, foundations, social venture capital firms, and other organizations support environmental projects, including recycling, new technology, organic farming, ecotourism, and other "Earth-friendly" products and services, according to the e-mail.

The e-mail recognizes Chittenden Bank, Brattleboro, Vt.; Coastal Enterprises, Inc., Wiscasset, Maine; Permaculture Credit Union, Santa Fe, N.M.; Wainwright Bank and Trust Company, Boston, Mass.; and others as "green banking" organizations.

Amazing! Just when you thought life couldn't be more amusing. I suppose, later on, unless you are a certified organic dairy farmer who markets less than 42.7 percent of the milk to a co-op, you might not be eligible for a loan . . . or if you don't compost at least 83.3 percent of your dairy manure, could it be possible that your credit rating would decrease? . . . or if you don't employ at least 32.4 percent methane collection techniques, perhaps you wouldn't qualify for that new truck loan. . . .

It's a nice idea but one in which needs to be real. Singling out certain types of operations who qualify could create real headaches. Bad actors who risk the environment could simply employ one or two "green techniques" and then qualify . . . and who defines these techniques anyway? Have the techniques been proven to actually "protect" the environment?

Sadly, it's a sign of these increasingly restrictive times for many producers.

To Plan Your Farm's Financial Future

Every farmer who is experiencing the current cash-flow crisis needs to carefully plan the cash flow projection for the farm for at least the next 12 months. The best tool available for this is FINPACK. The Center for Farm Financial Management at the University of Minnesota has just announced a special offer which will enable you to use Finpack on your farm computer for a year for about the price of one cull bull calf.

The FINPACK Annual Subscription Program, available with the release of FINPACK 2003, gives you the full power of the Personal Version of FINPACK for one year for only $99!

It's for producers only, and includes the full working version of FINPACK, technical support, and Internet patches.

During 2003, you would be able to update your balance sheets, evaluate "what if" FINLRB plans, create FINFLO cash flow plans, and complete FINAN year end financial analyses.

Give CFFM at Minnesota a call at (800) 234-1111 or visit their website at www.cffm.umn.edu for more details on software options. Penn State Extension will offer two days of practical FINPACK hands-on-computer training March 4 and 5 at the Cumberland County Extension Office to the first 10 paid registrants. The program will be repeated in Lancaster, March 18 and 19. The fee will be $50 per participant for two days. Call Roland Freund or Laura Watts at 717-240-6500 for more information on the training.

NOT ALWAYS 'SECOND BEST'

Background Scripture:
Acts 16:1-5; Philippians 2:19-24; 1 Timothy 1:1-3; 2 Timothy 1:1-5.
Devotional Reading:
2 Timothy 2:1-7.

An ancestor of mine, Monroe Althouse, was conductor of one of the most historic concert bands in the USA. He also was the composer of many fine marches. At the same time, however, there was another conductor/composer who substantially overshadowed him: John Philip Sousa.

The grandson of Monroe Althouse also became an outstanding musician, a leading tenor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York. But there was another tenor who outshone him: Enrico Caruso.

When I was in grades one through six, even at my best I was only second academically to another boy. He even got the part in a play that I thought was going to be mine. Since then, I'm not sure I've been first in anything all that significant, but I have learned that, in life, not being "first" doesn't necessarily mean being "second best."

'Everything'?

Last evening I was watching a rerun of a 1960's film, "Grand Prix," and there was a scene in which a driver who caused an accident was confronted by the wife of the seriously injured driver of another car: "What a terrible way to win!" she said. "No," the driver replied, "Winning is everything." I realize that is one of the prevailing values in our world today and I have nothing against "winning" or being "number one," but to believe that it is "everything" or even most important is a denial of what Jesus teaches us.

God has a different way of defining "winning." Therefore, some people in this world who think they are winning are in actuality losing.

As Jesus warned us, "For what does it profit a man if he gains the whole world and loses or forfeits himself?" (Lk.9:25). God's values are often completely opposed to those of society: What we're called to is not being "first," but making and sharing the most of what God gives us.

Timothy was a valued helper for all of his ministry, but he never achieved the stature of Paul. Yet, suppose that the early Christian churches had been filled with the likes of Paul! What the church needed in abundance were disciples like Timothy, people who, although they probably couldn't preach with the power of Paul, could and did provide a powerful witness as valued helpers. Paul recognized Timothy's gifts and he wanted this young man to accompany him on his second missionary journey.

A Genuine Concern

Paul's high regard for Timothy is spelled out in his letter to the Philippians; "I have no one like him, who will be genuinely anxious for your welfare" Timothy was quite unlike many of the others: "They all look after their own interests, not those of Jesus Christ." "But Timothy's worth you know, how as a son with a father he has served me in the gospel" (2:20-22).

One tradition holds that Timothy became the first bishop of Ephesus. But other scholars wonder whether there may not have been two disciples named Timothy in this era. It doesn't matter, for what we know of him is sufficient. He was highly valued as Paul's helper. He had a genuine concern for the welfare of the Christians he visited. He was also a trustworthy helper who put the cause of Christ ahead of his own ambitions. There's nothing "second-best" about that kind of discipleship.

Like Timothy, I, too, had a spiritual father. He also was a Paul: Dr. Paul Price, first my pastor and sponsor in the ministry. While I was still in seminary he brought me into his pastorate as a "ministerial trainee." Later, when he was a retired, he joined me as my assistant in my pastorate in Mohnton, Pa. But one does not have to be in the clergy in order to have a spiritual parent or to be one. This is a gift that all of us can receive and give — and it will never be "second-best."

East Fluid Milk And Cream Review

Madison, Wis.
February 12, 2003
Report Supplied by USDA

Spot prices of class II cream, dollars per lb. butterfat: F.O.B. producing plants: Northeast: 1.2027-1.3386. Delivered Equivalent: Atlanta: 1.2340-1.3386 mostly 1.2550-1.2759.

PRICES OF CONDENSED SKIM, dollars per lb. wet solids, F.O.B. producing plants: Northeast: Class II, includes monthly formula prices: .9200-.9800; Class III - spot prices - .7200-.8400.

SPOT SHIPMENTS OF GRADE A MILK: FLORIDA: This week: In 0, Out 52; last week: In 0, Out 15; last year: In 0, Out 0. SOUTHEAST STATES: This week: In 0, Out 0; last week: In 0, Out 0; last year: In 0, Out 0.

Milk production is steady to slightly heavier in most sections of the region. Florida's need for milk ranges from level to slightly slower and in-state handlers moved increased volumes of milk out of state for manufacturing. Farther north, the almost weekly storms are helping milk sales, but these, too, have some limits. A storm hit much of the Middle Atlantic seaboard and New England last Friday (2/7) and another one hit those same areas on Monday (2/10) and another one at midweek hit New England. Reports indicate that the first storm did boost milk sales, but the second and third storms had a lesser impact on retail sales. The closing of schools in the storm areas did offset the jump in retail demand.

Milk output in the Northeast is mostly steady. Fluid milk supplies are little changed from last week. Bottled milk sales are termed by many as flat, but many schools will be closed for Presidents' Day (2/17) and this may increase surplus milk volumes late this week. Manufacturing plant contacts report that milk receipts are steady and plant schedules are moderate to occasionally heavy. A cheese plant that had been down for renovations last week is back on line this week.

The condensed skim market is steady to weaker. Offerings are increasing and prices are unchanged to lower.

The fluid cream market continues to be weak. Demand from Class II users is slow despite lower prices. Most suppliers report an abundant cream supply with continued heavy shipments of excess to local and Midwestern butter makers. Ice cream and cream cheese producers are occasionally taking extra or spot loads, but their contracts are normally sufficient to meet their production needs. However, the relatively low price of cream is attractive to some users who can take advantage of the current low multiples being offered by some producers. Some contacts were pleased to report that bottled cream production is occasionally improved this week. This meant that they had less or no cream to clear on the spot market. Churning activity remains heavy.

Corn Belt Feedstuff

St. Joseph, Mo.
February 11, 2003
Report Supplied By USDA

This week's feedstuff prices showed some strength due to improved demand as mills prepare to shutdown or slowdown run-time for upcoming holiday. Feb. 7, 2003
BUTTER FALLS BELOW SUPPORT

•Grade AA butter fell below $1.05/lb.

•Butter, cheese, & nonfat now purchased by USDA.

•CME futures weakening daily.

Its been another week in which the government is purchasing butter, cheese and nonfat dry milkall three dairy productsfor the dairy price support program. In fact, USDA for the week ending February 7th, purchased 22.7 million pounds of nonfat dry milk from the West, Central and Eastern markets. It seems everyone is producing surplus nonfat dry milk.

Grade AA cash butter prices at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange fell below the support price of $1.05 per pound this week. USDA reports that this is the first time this has happened since December 1993. Butter inventories are double what they were a year ago, and churning is still strong. In addition, we won't see any boost in demand until the Easter Holidays.

The cheese market isn't doing much better. Block cheese is trading at just a penny or two above support levels. Year-end inventories of cheese are fairly strong. And production for the year 2002 was well above year-ago levels.

While the milk supply grew 2.7 percent in 2002, total production of cheese was at 8.4 billion pounds, up 3.8 percent. Surplus milk and dairy products went into cheese production.

The futures market at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange continues to weaken.

This was particularly obvious after the Commerce Department announced a negative result for the fourth quarter growth rate for the U.S. economy (GDP). The 2003 monthly average CME Class III futures price as of December 2, 2002 stood at $11.99. In other words, dairy producers in early December of last year could have locked in all of their milk production for 2003 at a Class III price that was very close to the five-year average. As of February 6, 2003, the 12-month average CME price (reflecting the actual January Class III price) deteriorated to $10.84 per cwt. In other words, the market eroded 2003 milk prices by $1.14 per cwt between now and then.

At this point I would recommend holding off on any efforts to forward price milk, particularly for early spring and late fall. The market is looking for any reason to increase milk prices, but simply can't find any. That's why the Class III prices for the period January May 2003 have become so soft.

We are clearly at the bottom of the price cycle. Can Fall 2003 Class III milk prices decline even more from current market expectations? Of course they can. But I'm guessing that there is a greater than even chance that fall milk prices will improve. The growth in the milk supply cannot continue at its current pace. And the economy may stabilize and improve after the conflict with Iraq is resolved one way or another. Both should help improve dairy market prices.

National Feeder Cattle Weekly Review

St. Joseph, Mo.
February 7, 2003
Report Supplied By USDA

NATIONAL FEEDER & STOCKER SUMMARY for week ending Feb. 7 — Total Receipts: 457,200, last week 319,700. Direct: 63,600, last week 57,500. Video/ Internet: 66,700, last week 800. Auctions: 326,900, last week 261,400. This weeks reported auction volume included 53 percent over 600 lbs and 43 percent heifers.

Compared to last week, feeder steers and heifers sold mostly steady through Wednesday, turning mostly 1.00 lower by the end of the week. Feeder trading started-out active in an optimistic atmosphere as the producer-side of the industry anxiously awaited an 82.00 fat cattle market. The Wednesday morning trading session was a welcome sight to cattle feeders, but packers soon closed the window and by mid-afternoon the curtains had been pulled.

The CME Futures failed to see any support from the higher cash market and both attitudes and market signals turned sour late in the week. The bulk of this pressure came from chart watchers and long-time Live Cattle Futures contract holders, who bailed out of the market before being forced to take delivery.

Feedlots continue to be reserved in their yearling buying as many expect a large influx of heavy cattle to be coming off wheat pasture in early March, since many farmers will want to harvest a crop this year. Stocker cattle prices were unevenly steady to 2.00 higher than last week.

The southeastern calf market could not settle on a direction as trends varied from one auction to another on much heavier receipts. Numbers were also heavier in the mid-section of the country, but the availability of thin-fleshed lightweight calves was limited.

Backgrounders are finally down to windshielding their wheat cattle, leaving extra time to swing by the sale barn and get a head start on their grass or graze-out cattle. Periodical winter snows have kept most of the Southern Plains up to date on ground moisture, but the Midwest is very dry and will be in serious trouble if spring rains dont bring relief. Hopefully extreme drought and fires wont dominate the front pages as we start to warm-up this year.

Pasture Perfect® Dealer of the Week:

Bob Boyce

This week Ampac Seed Company and Rohrer Seeds recognize Bob Boyce, founder and owner of Lil' Ponderosa Enterprises of Carlisle, PA. Bob's goal is to help farmers find the same success he has enjoyed using Managed Intensive Grazing (MIG). He raises purebred Angus cows and thouroughbred horses on his family farm in PA.

Bob Boyce

"Wow, what a combination!" Bob exclaimed in a recent conversation. "The introduction of Pasture Perfect® mixes and the new Aitchison Seedmatic No Till Drill have proven to be an unbeatable combination. They have enabled us to rapidly establish high quality pastures with one pass across the field – planting all types of seeds from a single seed box!

Bob takes great pride in sharing ways to reduce costs and increase efficiency. He uses the drill in both spring and fall to stitch in new grass and legumes along with annuals like rye, oats, or wheat. The benefits include increased and improved forage and better performance.

Bob has built an MIG demo site using Pasture Perfect® mixes and invites folks to visit and see for themselves how this combination is working. Contact Bob at Plants Providing Weapon Warnings?

FORT COLLINS, Colo. — Colorado State University biologists have been awarded a Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency grant to examine the possibility of genetically engineering plants to rapidly lose their green color in response to biological or chemical weapons.

The scientists' goal is to develop simple and affordable plants that can quickly sense deadly agents and warn the public of danger.

"The increasing threat of terrorism presents a great need for simple and robust detectors of harmful biological or chemical agents," said biology professor and principal investigator June Medford.

"Plants have evolved elaborate mechanisms to sense and respond to their environment. By using advanced biotechnology methods, we believe we can genetically engineer these mechanisms to produce plant sentinels that can provide an almost immediate warning of biological or chemical agents."

Medford and co-principal investigator Anireddy Reddy are working on phase one of the 18-month DARPA grant to create plants that act as detection systems that are easy to understand, affordable, available to a mass public and can work quickly. The scientists will focus on genetically engineering plants to lose their color in response to a chemical, biological or viral compound introduced into the environment.

"Since Sept. 11, 2001, national defense has taken on a different meaning.

America has always been somewhat isolated from global conflict by the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; however, we now must consider that warfare in the form of biological and chemical weapons could be deployed at home by terrorists," said Reddy, who also is a professor of biology at Colorado State.

According to the researchers, plants, unlike some technologies being proposed to detect biological and chemical agents, are much more affordable and can last for years.

"People are accustomed to plants and not to chemical sensors," said Medford. "Plant sentinels would be unthreatening to the general public and could be deployed in shopping malls and office buildings where people would recognize an immediate loss of green color. In addition, the loss of green color could be rapidly quantified by authorities with portable hand-held equipment."

In vast geographic areas, the researchers said that detector systems could be introduced into trees and plants typical for landscapes, such as evergreens, and aquatic areas, such as algae, allowing satellites to monitor and perceive any change of color in response to detection of adverse agents.

"The plants would provide warnings so people could immediately vacate an affected area, and then experts could verify exactly what the agent is," said Reddy.

"Unlike the Bio-Watch plan which would take 12 to 24 hours to detect and report pathogens, the plants would give nearly immediate warnings."

The Colorado State biologists would eventually like to create a separate type of plant and tree that would detect each type of threatening agent: biological, chemical and viral.

In nature, the color loss of plants and trees is a slow process; in the lab, the scientists are working to rapidly speed up that progression.

Participation In Ag Census Encouraged

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Recently acting Agriculture Secretary Dennis Wolff urged all Pennsylvania farmers, growers, and agribusinesses to participate in the 2002 Census of Agriculture.

The February 3 deadline has passed and a large number of Pennsylvania farmers, growers, and agribusinesses have returned their forms to the USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS). However, there are still some census forms outstanding.

"Pennsylvania's agricultural community has a critical stake in this census of agriculture," stated Acting Secretary Wolff. "All of agriculture, whether a large dairy farm in Bradford County or a vegetable farm in Lancaster County, is critical to showing the importance and contribution of our farmers, understanding structural changes, and knowing how to meet the changing needs of our 21st Century agriculture industry." In December 2002, over 91,000 agriculture census forms were sent out across Pennsylvania.

Secretary Wolff noted that Pennsylvania ranks in the top ten states in response to the 2002 Census of Agriculture. However, to develop an accurate picture of Pennsylvania agriculture, it is vital that all farmers and growers who have not already returned their census forms take the time to submit them.

An accurate report of farm operations in Pennsylvania helps to formulate a complete, detailed picture of agriculture in Pennsylvania and the nation.

This is the 26th Census of Agriculture conducted by USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS) in conjunction with the Agricultural Statistics Service. Snapshots of U.S. Agriculture dating back to 1840 continue to be a valuable resource to farmers, growers, farm organizations, agribusiness, farm media, as well as county, state, and federal government.

By law, data provided by individual farms is held in strictest confidence.

No information will be disclosed about any individual operation.

For assistance in the completion of the census, a help line has been established at 1-888-4AG-STAT.

sources, and public health.

The current state of world affairs and our dependence on oil for growing and distributing food add up to profound insecurity in our food system, according to Ritchie.

"For me, this question of security has become central, has become one of the dominant questions in everyday life," he said. "We know now how the international oil industry is so central to the destabilization of our personal and national security."

The movement toward a war with the large oil-producing country Iraq "brings the food dependency on oil front and center," said Ritchie.

Most U.S. food production depends on petroleum-based chemicals and diesel fuel. Transporting food over long distances also requires large quantities of fuel.

"All these things make our food security completely entwined with oil," Ritchie said.

Ritchie compared the current U.S. food system to that of the ancient Roman Empire, during the period of time when a thriving population of small-scale, "yeoman" farmers were being displaced by a shift toward consolidated grain production run by large landowners.

The Roman Empire was built by these small farmers, who had their own security, and were devoted to the state, according to Ritchie. But the shift toward centralized food production and the subsequent lowering of grain prices drove these farmers out of business and brought about a "bread and circus" policy. During this era, masses were fed to a minimal degree and their minds were kept occupied by circuses, Ritchie said.

"This eventually weakened the Roman Empire and allowed outside forces to crush and destroy it."

The U.S. has entered a similar state of vulnerability, Ritchie said, in large part because of the industrialization and consolidation of our oil-dependent food system.

"It's clear today, if you destroy your small farmers and your food security inside a great nation, you will weaken yourself to the point that you will invite and be vulnerable to outside attack."

Repeated low prices for milk, grain, and other farm products have caused many farmers to lose faith in their ability to provide a secure livelihood for themselves and their children.

"Panic is a very good description of what happens when year after year, harvest after harvest, the price you receive is below your cost of production," Ritchie said.

PASA conference participants enjoyed a lunch prepared from Pennsylvania-grown products.

True food security will have to depend on thriving independent growers, processors, and marketers, according to Ritchie.

"We need local control, we need local energy... we need local food supplies."

A shift in that direction is already taking place, Ritchie said. He described "a movement of farmers moving toward sustainability" — individuals and groups like PASA who are engaged in running farms, food-processing facilities, and local food distribution groups that are profitable, support the community, and take care of the environment priorities Ritchie called the "triple-bottom line" of a sustainable food system.

"PASA is part of a much larger movement," he said.

In addition to farm-based groups across the country, a number of larger companies "have also begun to think about this triple-bottom line," Ritchie said. He gave the example of Cargill-Dow, an international corporation working on a biodegradable plastic made from non-about sustainable farming and food distribution practices.

"For years, I'd heard from hundreds of people that we need something," he said.

Bowser said PASA has grown both in numbers and influence over the years.

"I've seen tremendous progress," Bowser said of the group that within the last two years has broadened its scope to also include political action.

"There's hope here, and it's all about connecting people," he said.

Bowser now serves as executive director of FoodRoutes, a central Pennsylvania-based organization that works at connecting farmers and consumers.

"It's clear today, if you destroy your small farmers and your food security inside a great nation, you will weaken yourself to the point that you will invite and be vulnerable to outside attack."

The conference included a wide selection of workshops, such as The Health Benefits of Grass-fed Livestock; Marketing Value-Added Products; Local Food Systems and World Trade; Women in Agriculture; Community Food Security Who's In Charge of the Food Supply?; The Soil-Plant-Ruminant Health Connection; Sustainable Dairy Farms in the 21st Century; and How To Start a Community-Supported Agriculture Farm.

Brian Syder, PASA's executive director said that more than half of the 1,200 people at the conference were farmers.

"We have some power because we (PASA members) are farmers and because we are farming well," Snyder said.

Honoring A PASA Pioneer

PASA presented its Sustainable Ag Leadership this year to Tim Bowser, the first executive director of the organization when it was launched in the early 1990s. He served in the position for 10 years.

Bowser grew up an Erie County fruit farm and graduated from Penn State with a master's degree in rural sociology. He worked for Penn State extension for about 10 years, employed in its small-scale ag center and with integrated pest management.

While working as an extension agent, Bowser said he was made aware of the need for an organization to educate people

'Successful Farming' Editor Speaks At PASA Conference

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Cheryl Tevis, ag issues editor at Successful Farming, the nationwide ag magazine based in Iowa, delivered a closing keynote address at the 12th annual conference of the Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture (PASA) at the Penn Stater Hotel and Conference Center last weekend.

Cheryl Tevis

Tevis affirmed PASA's work toward creating a more sustainable farm and food paradigm in the state.

"The time is ripe to question the status quo," Tevis told the group. "Although the role agriculture has played in making this country is clear, the path ahead is unclear. Conventional agriculture is not nurturing farmers or communities."

Tevis said that more can be done to convince family farmers that they may be missing opportunities to thrive through more sustainable practices.

"Agriculture must develop new market channels," she said. "Opportunities abound in the diversity of American consumers' food choices. In the future . . . choices will increasingly influenced by food ethics."

While these opportunities exist, getting the products to consumers can be a "daunting task" that requires broad support and cooperation.

"Farmers who are making the transition to different marketing and production methods are going to need community support," Tevis said, noting that many conventional farmers have been "browbeaten by industry arguments that it can't happen."

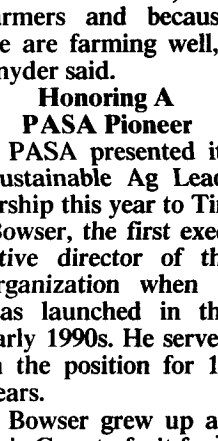
Tevis reminded the group that the U.S. was founded by people who took action against the prevailing attitudes of the day.

"The United States of America was founded by activists," she said. "Our agriculture, as well as our nation, is better off with more, not fewer, activists.

"Farmers must claim a stake in the United States. We must apply the tools of democracy."

Tevis urged land grant educational institutions to support sustainable ag practices.

"Our challenge for land grants is to foster programs that cause the public to once again view ag as a public good," she said.



A lesson well learned...

took 15 months), it was moved on to consumer testing. The university's football team was picked as the group of consumers to try the product.

After practice, researchers asked the players opinions of the drink, which resembles a chocolate milkshake, according to Bordi. "The players actually developed the drink — they told us what they liked and didn't like," he said.

By NCAA rules, the drink could be no more than 30 percent protein. Pasteurized as Penn States Creamery, it has a shelf life of 30-45 days.

Besides taste, health benefits were also an important part of the project. Researchers gathered weight data, measured dietary intake, and took blood and urine samples. They also asked the players to rate their pain on a numerical scale.

Players gave positive feedback on the drink and reported lowered soreness and increased energy. They also did not experience the drastic weight drops that may characterize preseason workouts, reported Bordi.

Health benefits, said Bordi, go beyond soreness and body recovery. Oxidant stress during exercise may contribute to fatigue and muscle injury, and "we strongly believe soy really reduces this," he said.

As for the future of the drink, "we're looking to have it bottled and hope that next year we can make it available to all the sports teams at Penn State," he said.

Ray Leiby, quality assurance, Wenger Feed Mill, Inc., discussed grain quality during his presentation.

Quality grains will not have a musty, sour, foreign odor, damaged kernels, or have foreign materials, said Leiby. This ensures the proper formulation of diets.

Grain accounts for 60 percent of the formulation, "so it can have a significant impact on the final ration," he said.

The business accepts 15.5 percent maximum moisture for corn and 14 percent for soybeans. A sieve is used to test for foreign material.

Random samples are taken to the laboratory for nutritional analysis. "We also test for molds and mycotoxins, and forward to another lab for amino acid profiles," said Leiby.

Grain spoilage is the result of microorganisms using a grains nutrients for grown and the reproductive process. However "molds don't tend to attack good, sound grain," he said.

According to Leiby, if sound grains are harvested and kept a low moisture and low temperature, they may retain their original processing quality and even original viability for many years.

Leiby also spoke about the advantage of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). He expects to see an increase in consumer confidence in GMOs.

Larry Hepner, department chair, development of agronomy and environmental science, Delaware Valley College, told the college's experience of growing corn for an unusual market: Hollywood.

The college rented ground to Disney for the movie "Signs," a movie about visitors from outer space that left crop circles in a cornfield.

Since the corn was valued for its aes[illegible] rather than productive va[illegible] this year's crop posed unusual ch[illegible]nges, according to Hepner.

The first challenge was that the film crew wa[illegible] to shoot the mo[illegible] from September 15 to October 15 — a time when Pennsylvania's corn is traditionally already harvested.

Consequently, DelVal pulled up the y[illegible], already-growing corn and replanted in the first week of June so that it would be maturing and green for the movie.

"We were also trying to grow corn through the driest part of the summer," he said. Consequently, the DelVal team designed an irrigation system for the 80-acre farm.

"We worked for a month to get everything set up," said Hepner.

The system included a center pivot and drip tape. Effluent was taken from a wastewater treatment plant. Newly-installed pipe mains fed the 100 miles of drip tape that traveled down every other row of corn.

"The wastewater did a very efficient job for us in growing out the corn," said Hepner.

Employees from a firm in California took two-by-four boards to create the crop circle pattern in the field.

"Our other fear was killing frost," said Hepner.

In fact, in the final week or shooting the area had three days of frost. However with the addition of green paint for the first three rows of corn, the last scenes were completed.

"It was a fun summer," said Hepner, "but there are practical applications we hope we can take from it." DelVal purchased the irrigation system from Disney to look at wastewater use for irrigation.

Marcia Zarley-Taylor, editor, "Top Producer," presented "Brazil: The Competitor You Can't Ignore."

From her first trip to Brazil in 1998, Zarley-Taylor was impressed with the rapidly changing country.

She has since spent several years researching "how Brazil's production affects our competitiveness on the world market. Their production capacity will change the way we look at the world.

"It's not soil, it's water that is making crops," said Zaley-Tayor.

In addition, "over the last 25-30 years, their scientists have definitely proven that it's not soil quality that counts. They're making soil in South America."

In the 1970s producers and scientists discovered that using phosphorus and other elements could correct the soil that has an organic content of one percent.

The southern part of the country, long considered the agrarian area, is now joined by the "Cerrado" savannah area in the middle — an area that was previously considered wasteland.

Recently the USDA released a scientific study that revealed that with improved transport, capital investment, and technology, Brazil could bring 420 million acres into production.

"What this means is that we have overlooked a continent — and this isn't marginally productive land," she said.

"The U.S. has been asleep at the switch,

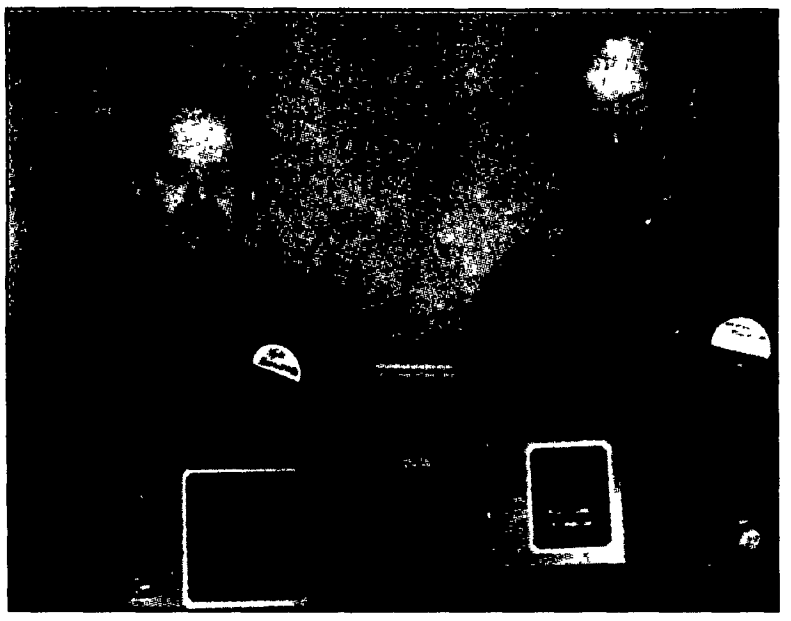
Five-Acre Corn Club, Soybean Contest Winners Announced

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU
Lancaster Farming Staff

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — The recent Pennsylvania Corn and Soybean Conference drew approximately 125 producers and industry representatives to a one-day event conducted here at the Holiday Inn.



Kyle Henninger, left, won the shelled corn no-till contest with 223.7 bushels per acre. With the win Henninger will go to the Commodity Classic this February in Charlotte, N.C. Last year Henninger won first place in both the Pennsylvania and national shelled corn no-till classes. Herman Manbeck, Womelsdorf, had a third in the shelled corn no-till class.

The Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association (PCGA), Pennsylvania Soybean Board, and Penn State Cooperative Extension sponsored the event.

Contest results are also a highlight of the conference. There were 67 participants in the Five-Acre Corn Club contests, according to Greg Roth, corn management research, and extension, Penn State.

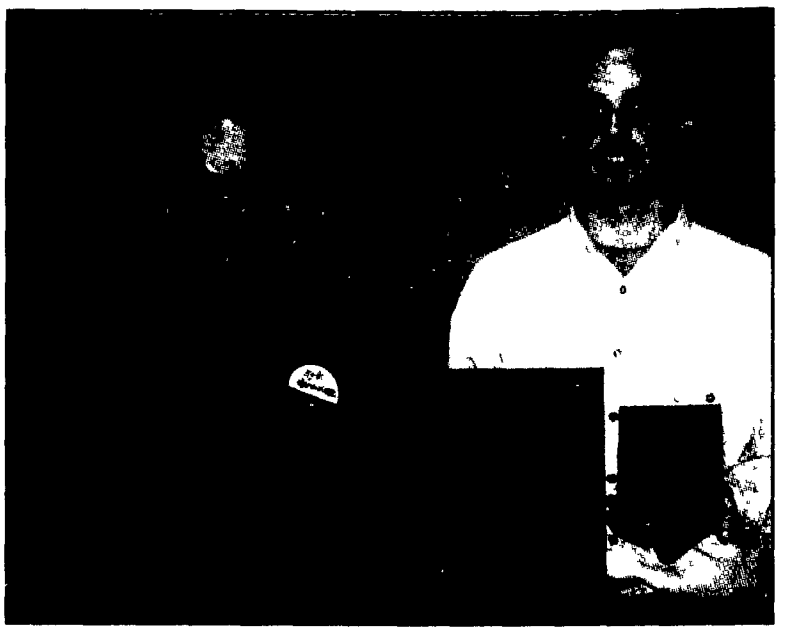
In the three-year average (2000-2002) classes, awards went to:

Ear Corn Class (3-year average):

- Kenneth Glazier, McConnellsburg, took first place with an average of 202.9 bushels per acre with Hubner H3505.
- Second place went to Harry Johnston, McConnellsburg, with an average of 189.1 bushels per acre with Pioneer 33G26.
- Tim Gordon, also of McConnellsburg, won third place with an average of 166.8 bushels per acre with Pioneer 33G26.

Shelled Corn Tilled (3-year average):

- First place went to Matthew Maximuck, Doylestown, with an average of 184.6 bushels per acre with Dekalb DKC60-09.



At right Jason Haycock, Shippensburg, first place winner in the 2002 Pennsylvania Soybean Yield Contest, had yields of 71.23 bushels per acre. Kyle Henninger, Breinigsville, had a second place with 69.44 bushels per acre.

- Second place in the same class went to Robert Rook, Ivyland, who checked in with 162.3 bushels per acre using Pioneer 33Y18.
- Third place was Norman Jodikinos, Clinton, with an average of 161.1 bushels per acre with Pioneer 34B23.

really not expecting that wed have to compete in the world market."

Because grain prices are so low, Brazil is also looking into poultry and swine production, she said.

U.S. producers need to "keep costs low beyond the farm gate all the way through — everything possible to help agriculture stay competitive."

First-class transport systems are also important, according to Zarley-Taylor.

"I can't believe that we've spent ten years debating about the locks and dams on the Mississippi River. If we want to stay competitive, it's an automatic."

She also urged American producers to capitalize on value-added options, since Brazil is dealing mostly in bulk.

"The challenge for us to realize is that the world has changed drastically. As we look into the future, we really need to develop strategies on how to cope with this," she said.

The afternoon program included speakers Sam Willet, director, public policy, National Grown Growers Association, and John Berry, ag marketing educator, Penn State Cooperative Extension, Lehigh County. The men discussed how to make the most of the Farm Bill.

A panel including Cliff Parker, RMA, director, Raleigh regional office; Gene Gantz, Ag Risk Strategies, Inc.; Rita McMullen, Stine, Davis, and Peck Insurance; and Kris Weaver, Morrissey Insurance Inc., discussed crop insurance.

New York Beef Industry Council's BEEFMAN A Winner

Beefman's primary audience is children, ages 6-12.

Entered under the "Producer-funded public relations program to consumers" category, Beefman will now advance to the national competition to be held in San Diego, Calif. in April.

Beefman is funded by beef producers through their $1-per-head checkoff.

LEAD New York Accepting Applications For New Class Of Leaders

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Do you want to improve your leadership skills while making meaningful industry contacts in the process? Could you be one of the next leaders to rise above the rest and advance New York's food and agriculture industry?

LEAD New York, a food and agricultural leadership program, is currently accepting applications for their class of 2003-2005. This leadership development curriculum is a two-year effort structured around a series of seminars, workshops, and field trips in which participants strengthen their leadership, communication, and managerial skills.

"This program gives members of the food and agriculture industry a chance to enhance their skills with an eye on becoming leaders in their field," says Larry Van De Valk, Director of LEAD New York. "Not only do our participants further develop the skills necessary for becoming an active leader, but just as important, they form bonds with other members of the industry, giving them the ability to network more effectively."

"My LEAD New York contacts are invaluable as we develop our legislative agenda for the good of New York's agriculture industry," says Julie Suarez, manager of government relations for New York Farm Bureau and a member of LEAD New York's class of 1999.

The program itself is spread out over two years, which includes 50 days of in-depth seminars, travel studies both in and outside of New York State and numerous workshops. Classes are held from October through April, generally from Thursday through Saturday, with a few exceptions.

The majority of the program is funded by food and agricultural industry donors and the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell University. The actual per-student cost is about $15,000, but participants are only expected to contribute $1,500 for each of the two years they are enrolled in the program. Many LEAD New York participants pay this fee with help from local sponsors.

The application deadline for this year is April 1, 2003.

For more information on LEAD NY or to obtain an application, call (607) 255-7907 or visit www.leadny.org.

Now Is The Time To Think About Your Fencing Needs

Glenn W. Michalak
Delaware Valley College
Equestrian Center Manager

For any horse owner, proper upkeep of fencing is essential to the health and well being of his or her animal(s).

Proper fencing for your horses is a critical choice. Good, correctly installed and maintained fencing will make all the difference for your horse's safety.

As spring approaches, now is a good time to re-evaluate existing fence, as many installers are booking jobs for the upcoming year.

The most commonly used material is wood, usually in the form of post and board. Wood fencing is the least expensive material of all fencing.

It comes in various forms, such as split rail, three or four boards, or sometimes a wire mesh topped with a sight board. Most wood fencing is treated, and has longevity of 20 to 25 years. The downside is that it will need painting every three to five years and can be an inviting substance for a horse to chew on.

Currently, a popular fencing material is various forms of PVC (polyvinyl chloride). It has great durability and is resistant to chewing. It and has little or no maintenance, save being power washed from time to time.

It is more expensive than all other materials, and there is a slight risk of a board shattering in very cold weather if run into by a horse. It is wise to install an electrified tape running along the inside of the rail to keep the horse from chewing or leaning over the fence.

Flexible rubber fencing, such as Centaur, is also popular for the same reasons, but has the advantage over PVC of being flexible enough for a horse to hit the fencing and bounce back.

Woven wire fencing is a good choice as well, especially for perimeters of pastures. Box wire fence has a weave creating a box, which gets progressively smaller from bottom to top, allowing a horse to kick it, but not have its leg become caught.

Diamond wire mesh is a tightly woven fence material, which, because of its design, resists a horse's kicking, but will give some so a horse may not be severely injured. Diamond wire has little downside, outside of expense. It is virtually maintenance free when properly installed, and has a life span of 20 to 25 years.

One word of caution a barbed wire fence should never be used for horses! Unlike cattle, their skin is easily cut by the material and may leave permanent scars. Whatever product you choose, a lot will depend on your long-term maintenance requirements, and how much you can invest in the short term.

Equine Tack Swap Scheduled

DEANNA CUNFER
Carbon/Schuylkill Co.
Correspondent

NAZARETH (Northampton Co.)—As spring approaches the Northampton County 4-H Center is once again gearing up to host a variety of events throughout the summer.

One of the season's opening events is the annual Equine Tack Swap scheduled 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday, April 12. The 4-H Center is located on Bushkill Center Road, Nazareth on five acres with an outdoor arena, pole barn, kitchen, a large indoor exhibit area and modern toilet facilities.

The tack swap is open to anyone who wishes to buy or sell horse related items, apparel and tack. No live animals or consignment items will be sold. All sellers must have a table.

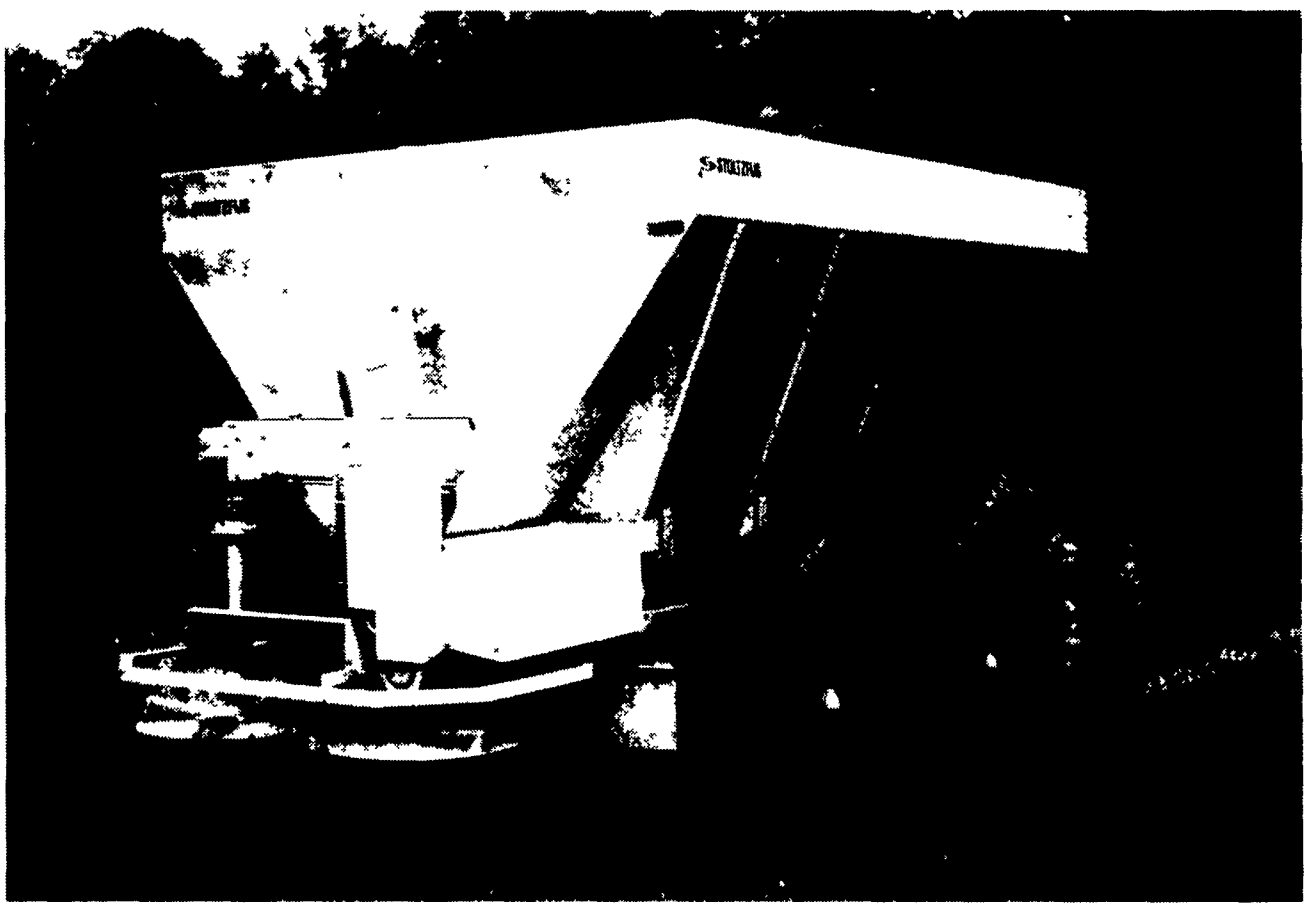
Anyone wishing to sell items in the indoor and pole barn areas must preregister at a cost of $15 per table in the indoor area; $12 per table in the pole barn area and $10 per spot in the outdoor arena, weather permitting. Outdoor arena spots will be allocated on the day of the event. Persons with large equipment to sell are welcome to display on the open grounds for the registration fee.

This annual Tack Swap is an excellent means to buy and sell horse related items as it draws visitors and vendors from far and wide, many from neighboring states that make a point of attending the event each year.

Food will be available for purchase during the day courtesy of Backtrackers 4-H Horse and Pony Club. Admission to the grounds is free and open to the public.

For more information contact Jan Martin at (610) 837-7294 or call the Northampton County Cooperative Extension office at (610) 746-1970.

Sometimes You Need a Spreader Built Like A Tank



When spreading stockpiled lime, for example. The Stoltzfus Wet Lime Spreader is likely the most powerful spreader of its kind on the market today. You see, we've been building them since 1945, and farmers are still using Stoltzfus Wet Lime Spreaders they've had for 20, even 30 years. Our special drag chain is 4 times stronger than stainless steel, and handles frozen and heavy stockpiled lime with ease. Plus for spreading compost, composted sludge, poultry litter and certain fertilizers, the WLS is without equal for sheer volume spreading.

Cut your fertilizer bill by liberating nutrients tied up by acid soil.

Use Lime.

Penn State Cooperative Extension Capitol Region Dairy Team

BEGIN PLANNING FOR SPRING LABOR NEEDS

Galen Kopp,
Extension Agent—Dairy,
Lebanon County, Pa.

As the sun lingers longer each evening in the western sky and blustery March yields to rainy April, many dairy producers' thoughts turn to crops and fieldwork. They dream of spending warm days in the fields harvesting the first hay crop and planting their favorite corn hybrids. Dairy producers should pause from their daydreaming to ponder how the daily barn work will continue when the fieldwork begins.

Dairy farm businesses that produce their own crops need to recognize that their labor and management requirements increase dramatically during planting and harvest times. In many cases dairy managers give priority to field work because they know how critical it is to harvest and plant in a timely manner.

When the same workforce that is normally employed for barn work is pressed into service in the field, stress results. Workers will either rush through their barn work in order to get into the field, or a skeleton crew will be left to do the work that normally employs more people. In either case, the result is usually a reduction in the quality and quantity of care given to the milking herd.

The costs of reduced care and management are not always understood, but honestly consider these questions:

How much less dry matter will cows eat on a given day because the feeder didn't have time to clean out the feedbunks? How much milk production will this cost me? If the herdsman wasn't driving the pack tractor on the bunker silo, would he have diagnosed that cow with ketosis before she developed a displaced abomasum? So we don't watch for heats as closely in May and June, we can always catch back up on breeding during July and August, right?

It should be clear to you at this point that stretching the regular workforce to cover the demands of peak planting and harvest time may not be your best plan. The costs associated with neglecting some aspects of cow care and management may greatly outweigh the cost of hiring additional labor. Let's take a look at three different labor options.

Option one is to turn to the services of custom equipment operators. You could simply stop using the dairy workforce to perform field operations and hire others to do it. This frees the dairy workforce to continue their regular work routines, but you still must manage the decision making with regard to fieldwork. Consider this option, especially before you invest in new field equipment.

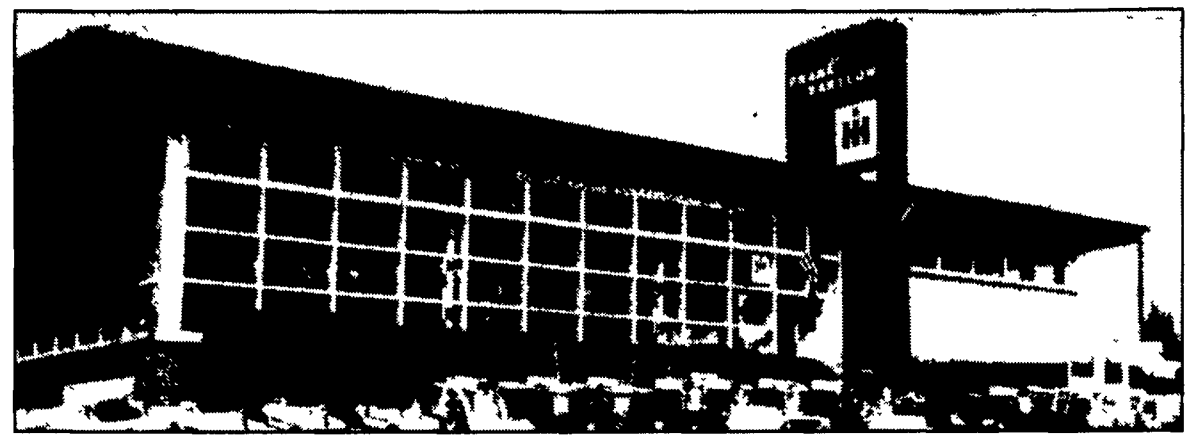
Option two is to hire additional labor to operate the field equipment. Once again, this frees the dairy workforce to stay at their regular jobs while others do the fieldwork. There are a few disadvantages with this option. Fieldwork is often performed on a last-minute basis, you must wait for the weather to be right and then try to get everything done in a short period of time. It is often difficult to schedule people to work for you on short notice, especially if they also work at other jobs. Another disadvantage is that there is little opportunity to train people in advance on how to operate the equipment.

Option three is to bring in seasonal help for certain parts of the dairy operation. Milking, calf feeding, cleanup, and bedding are dairy jobs that someone must perform year round. Dairy producers can hire and train additional labor to cover these jobs during the busiest parts of the crop season, and they can schedule these types of jobs in advance. This frees the regular workforce (often family members or long-term employees with equipment operating experience) to do fieldwork on a short-notice basis. It also allows them to stay in the field for extended periods without the interruption of milking and feeding.

There are costs associated with whatever option you choose. Choosing not to employ additional labor will lead to hidden costs in the form of lost productivity. An adequate supply of well-trained labor is the only way to ensure that you can both provide plenty of high-quality care to the milking herd and complete the fieldwork in a timely manner. Start planning now so that you will have a well-trained workforce in place before the pressure begins.

Walk Down Memory Lane

IH Prototype Dealership Open For Tours June 26-28



This building was built in 1946 based on International Harvester's prototype specifications. Today Frank Bartlow IH Dealership showcases much of the history connected with IH tractors and equipment. It will be open for tours during the Red Power Roundup, June 26-28.

MILLVILLE (Columbia Co.) — The Frank Bartlow International Dealership, Millville, closed in 1972, but will open for tours June 26-28 during the Red Power Roundup at Bloomsburg Fairgrounds.

The International Harvester (IH) prototype building evokes nostalgia that only "Red Power" fans can understand. Sort of like McDonald's golden arches, the prototype building design was identified throughout the U.S. as an IH dealership.

In 1946, the first day of deer season, Frank Bartlow began construction based on the IH Company's specifications. Offices are made of knotty pine and glass. The parts room houses bins constructed of lumber from trees harvested on the land on which it sets. Bartlow sawed and planed the wood himself.

The showroom has floor-to-ceiling glass windows that illuminate the International Harvester/McCormick Deering wares that were on display. For the past 35 years, a 1928 10-20 McCormick Deering tractor with rubber tires, owned by Bartlow's grandson Rollie Bartlow, has been on display. During the open house, many other IH tractors, Cub Cadets, IH equipment, refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners, and IH memorabilia will be displayed.

The Bartlow building is unique in that it incorporates a basement beneath the showroom and parts room. The basement has a 12x12-foot door on the north end for easy excess to the street. This enabled a large area to store equipment that was delivered to the dealership.

The building also served as a social gathering for the community. The grand opening was celebrated with square dancing and plenty of food. For several years, the annual IH Pancake Days attracted crowds and promoted sales.

Today Tubby Bartlow, Frank's son, owns the building. With the help of family, friends, and the local International Harvester Collectors Club of Central Pennsylvania, Chapter 17, Bartlow refurbished the building to its original condition. The site has been the home of the growing Red Power Showdown for the past two years.

At the Red Power Roundup, June 26-28, at the Bloomsburg Fairgrounds, busses will provide transportation to the Bartlow Dealership, about a 15-minute drive from the fairgrounds.

Bartlow and his family will be at the site to answer questions about the prototype building.

'Life Is Good'

Landis is pleased with the results.

"This is the first year that we're seasonal," he said. "And life is good."

About 100 farmers drove between snow-covered fields Monday to hear grazing topics and view slides of green pastures this week at the two-day Southeast Pennsylvania Grazing Conference at the Solanco Fairgrounds here this week. The local group of graziers has been going strong since it first began in 1993, Landis said. This year also featured two large-scale dairy graziers from New York and Wisconsin, an organic hog producer, a soil expert, and guests from as far away as Ontario.

At the end of December, Landis's entire 90-cow mixed-breed herd went into a dry period. The cows had been bred over about an eight-week period early last summer, with the goal of having them all calve this spring as the various grasses and legumes in the pastures are coming into their prime.

"Good grass is what makes our milk," Landis said. "We're managing the farm with grass."

Landis uses a combination of perennial and annual forages to maximize production on about 125 acres of pasture paddocks on the rented farm. A large part of his perennial grass is fescue, best known for its ability to stretch the grazing season into late fall and early winter. While fescue is not the cows' top choice for grazing, Landis said he has been overseeding the paddocks with white clover in the fall, along with fertilizer. The clover increases the palatability of the fescue and adds protein to the diet.

Landis took replacement heifers off the farm last year to allow the milking cows maximum feed intake from grazing.

"If you're taking grass away from your milk cows to feed (heifers)," he said, "you're losing more money than you realize."

One of the keys to profitability on Landis's operation is its certified organic status. Last year, Landis received an average of more than $21 per hundredweight for his milk. That price is practically unaffected by the ongoing slump in the conventional milk market.

Tending the dry herd in the winter is an easy job, according to Landis.

"Managing cows in the winter, about all you need is a 4-wheeler and a tractor to haul bales." The large round bales are rolled out on the paddocks over a wide area to prevent competition. There is little wasted on the dry cows, he said, as their lower nutrional requirements allow them to be fenced in an area until the hay is cleaned up. For windy winter days and nights, he distributes the hay near a tree-line which serves as a windbreak — what Landis calls his "tree-stall" barn.

During times of the year when it is necessary to feed hay to the milking cows, he uses feeder wagons to minimize waste.

The only crop Landis harvests mechanically on the farm is wrapped baleage, a job he called "simple." One person can handle the mowing, raking, and baling. He then hires someone from outside to do the wrapping.

Beside pasture and free-choice, Landis feeds milking cows 8 to10 pounds of grain per day — about 70 percent corn and 30 percent oats. Minerals are mixed with the grain.

While Landis estimated his rolling herd average is at about 12,000 to13,000 pounds of milk — about half to two-thirds the production of an average conventionally-fed Holstein herd, he believes his efficient methods (including a 16-unit New Zealand swing-style parlor), innovative techniques, and unique marketing situation add up to a considerably higher profit margin.

Another perk of running a seasonal operation is lifestyle flexibility. For example, Landis recently took a 12-day vacation.

"It's the first time I've done that since I've been farming," he said.

'Grass farming is more fun than I ever thought it would be," said the former truck driver who first started farming in 1988. "I'm an information-gatherer. I go home and see if it's going to work."

Other graziers speaking at the conference were Gary Burley, 500-cow seasonal dairy grazier from Warsaw, N.Y.; Tom Frantzen, who grazes beef and manages an organic 1,000-hog start-to-finish operation in Iowa; and Charlie Opitz, a 1,300-cow dairy grazier from Wisconsin.

Opitz's 3,700-acre operation has been grass-based since the mid-1980s. He shared the unique challenges and advantages of large-scale grazing and shared problem-solving insights that can be applied to a variety of operations, including smaller farms.

Opitz said he has had a number of interesting conversations over the years with graziers from New Zealand and Australia, countries known for getting the most out of grass-based livestock systems. Opitz said graziers there are curious about what's happening in this country.

"They wonder why the U.S. dairy industry hasn't figured it out yet," he said.

Jim Martindale, an engineer and soil expert from Indiana, spoke Tuesday about light tillage techniques that help aerate the soil and increase water uptake. He plans to return to the area in late March for more demonstrations on the topic.

The conference was moderated by Roman Stoltzfoos, grass-based organic dairy and poultry producer from the Gap area.

Stoltzfoos summed up the speakers' collective attitude on grazing.

"How you think about a problem is more important than the amount of money you have to spend on it," he said.

Read more about what's happening in the grazing world in next week's Foraging Around section.

Pennsylvania Farmers Union Supports Country-Of-Origin Labeling Law

BLOOMSBURG — Pennsylvania Farmers Union (PFU) has urged Congress to require a study that would show the true costs and benefits of the country-of-origin food labeling law included in the 2002 farm bill.

In a letter to Congress this week, PFU and 100 other farm and consumer groups asked House and Senate members to uphold the congressional intent of the new labeling law despite attempts to weaken the law in implementation.

Recently, the USDA released data on the costs of the labeling provision. The groups are concerned the data may be used to undermine support for the mandatory country-of-origin labeling law, which is to go in effect by September 2004. The new law directs grocery stores to label fresh meats, fish, fruits, vegetables, and peanuts with the country in which it was grown and processed.

"USDA's data fails to include a benefits analysis or recognize existing government regulations and standard marketing practices that can be used to implement the new law," said PFU President Larry Breech. "A true costs and benefits study should be performed 'to ensure this program is implemented in a practical way that benefits consumers and producers. We strongly urge the agriculture secretary to implement the country-of-origin labeling law as directed by Congress."

Breech is encouraging farmers, ranchers, and consumers to ask their elected officials to work with USDA to make sure the country-of-origin labeling law is implemented with the original intent of Congress. Additional information and a sample letter is available at National Farmers Union's Website, www.nfu.org.

Heat with Corn!

Burn Shelled Corn In This Biomass Furnace

A BETTER ALTERNATIVE

The corn burning furnace has many advantages over wood and coal heat. The large storage bin holds up to 14 bushels of fuel, which is automatically fed into the combustion chamber as needed. There's no need to load the furnace several times a day. The use of corn also eliminates the bark mess, insects, splinters, and handling problems connected with the use of wood fuel, and the dust and dirt from coal. UL Approved.

Keep Your Corn Consistently Clean with new Keystone

With a variety of soil-applied herbicides available today that control grasses and weeds, it may seem there is little room for improvement But applicators and growers continue to ask for products that handle easily and give consistent weed control year in and year out

That's why new Keystone* herbicide from Dow AgroSciences has been developed Keystone is a powerful combination of acetochlor and next generation atrazine that has been proven in field trials to control a wide variety of grasses and broadleaf weeds, including foxtail, barnyardgrass, crabgrass, waterhemp, lambsquarters, pigweed, nightshade, smartweed and more

Keystone handles extremely well compared to other soil-applied herbicides due to the combination of next generation atrazine and a new, advanced surfactant/additive package that keeps the suspo-emulsion formulation uniform and consistent within the tank

As a result, Keystone is less viscous than other herbicides, so it handles easier and delivers an even spray distribution that provides superior control of grasses and broadleaf weeds Keystone activates with only ¼ inch of rain, and has a wide application window – from 30 days early preplant all the way to 11-inch corn

Keystone delivers 1½ pounds of atrazine when used at the standard 2 65 qt /acre application rate If you require less atrazine, new Keystone LA herbicide delivers ¾ pound of atrazine at the standard use rate of 2 0 qt /acre Both are perfect partners with Hornet* WDG herbicide for superior broad-spectrum, one-pass preplant or preemergence weed control

Poultry Industry On The Alert For Exotic Newcastle Disease

Local Meeting Addresses END

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU
Lancaster Farming Staff

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — The hot news in the poultry industry today is the outbreak of Exotic Newcastle Disease (END) in California and now Nevada and Arizona.

More than 30 poultry industry representatives gathered at Kreider's restaurant in Manheim to hear an update from Dr. David Kradel, DVM, adviser to PennAg Industries Association and Penn State, and Jim Shirk, PennAg.

Newcastle viruses, explained Kradel, differ in disease-producing abilities. The three strains include low to high pathogenicity. The low pathogenicity Lentogenic strain, for example, used for vaccines, is endemic to the U.S. and essentially all commercial flocks are vaccinated multiple times for the disease. The highly pathogenic strains of the Newcastle viruses cause Exotic Newcastle Disease.

The virus, said Kradel, is spread by infected birds, people, equipment, and air. It can survive for weeks in a warm, moist environment and indefinitely in frozen materials, however can be killed by disinfectants, heat, dryness, and sunlight.

All avian species can be infected, however waterfowl are less susceptible. In fact some species, such as parrots and waterfowl, can be carriers and shedding the disease but not showing any signs, said Kradel.

Birds may exhibit symptoms such as sneezing, coughing, gasping, and nasal discharge, besides a watery, greenish diarrhea. Other, external signs may be the swelling of combs, wattles, eyelids, and head.

Nervous signs may be depression, tremors, twisted head or neck, paralysis, or sudden death. Hens may produce eggs with a moderate to marked decrease and with thin shells.

The disease can be confused with highly pathogenic avian influenza, fowl cholera, laryngotracheitis, fowl pox, and Coryza, according to Kradel.

Poultry farms may experience up to 100 percent mortality in unvaccinated flocks and 10-20 percent mortality in vaccinated flocks. It does not, however, pose a threat to public health and doesn't affect the safety of poultry and egg products.

To prevent the virus, avoid contact with game fowl, recently acquired parrots, and migrating waterfowl, suggested Kradel. "By not looking at milder cases of the disease, we could conceivably miss this for a period of time," he said.

From 1973 until now, END was introduced through pet birds each year (except for two years), however was picked up before it spread to commercial flocks.California's most recent outbreak began in game fowl flocks. The discussion in that state, said Kradel, is whether the virus should be contained by vaccinating birds or by massive depopulation.

Six commercial flocks were infected and are now depopulated in California, said Shirk. Besides commercial flocks, backyard flocks have also been depopulated.

The owners of the birds have been compensated fair market value from the USDA. More than 1,500 officials are working on eradication, and more than 9,000 premises have been quarantined, he said.

Shirk gave an update on the situation after speaking to Bill Mattos, California Poultry Federations Executive Director. According to Shirk, Mattos said, "as an industry, we still feel things are moving too slowly." Mattos is hoping to see a shutdown of all live bird markets, besides the introduction of laws requiring permits for anyone hauling poultry.

"We do feel that the USDA and California Ag Departments are cooperating well, and their efforts are essential to stamping this out," said Mattos, however "we just get a bit frustrated by how slow decisions are sometimes made."

Although everything is being done to keep any birds from moving out of the state, said Mattos, he wonders how many fighting cocks are moving underground throughout the country.

Pennsylvania should be careful of underground poultry movement out of California, since the state "had a lot of (game) birds that they can't account for that may have traveled east," he said.

"The main things is that we want to keep our biosecurity eyes open. It could be something really minor — such as a minor drop in egg production — but its important to get it checked," Shirk said.

END Affects Trade with 34 Countries

Nearly two million birds have been destroyed in California and Nevada, where a task force comprised of more than 1,600 federal and state animal health employees is working to stop an outbreak of Exotic Newcastle Disease (END) that has infected or exposed six commercial poultry operations and nearly 1,700 noncommercial or 'backyard' flocks.

The END eradication effort, which has been ongoing since October 2002, was dealt a setback Wednesday, Feb. 5, when Arizona Department of Agriculture officials announced END had spread to a small flock of backyard birds on the Colorado River Indian Tribe's reservation in western Arizona.

A highly contagious foreign viral disease, END affects only poultry and most species of birds, but it does not pose a health threat to humans, food or other animals.

Dr. James Lenarduzzi, acting executive director for the Texas Animal Health Commission, the state's regulatory agency for livestock and poultry health, stated, "Commercial flock movement has been stopped from the affected areas.

"However, many people with a large yard or country acreage own a few chickens for laying eggs, or for the enjoyment of having ducks, geese or other bird species as yard pets. Students often choose to raise poultry for their 4-H or agricultural science class project"

Dr. Lenardduzzi, said there were concerns that END-exposed birds could be transported (into another state) by passenger vehicle, then be introduced into a small, noncommerical flock.

"We are urging owners to exercise extreme caution when purchasing or moving new birds into their flock. Buyers should always know where the birds originated, and health papers issued by a veterinarian should accompany the shipment," said Dr. Lenarduzzi.

"To keep END from spreading, everyone also must comply with the quarantine restrictions affecting birds, poultry and poultry products from southern California, southern Nevada and western Arizona."

Dr. Lenarduzzi explained that the impact of an END outbreak goes far beyond a state's borders. At least 34 countries, including Russia, Spain, Brazil, China, and Mexico have suspended the importation of poultry and poultry products from the states affected by the END outbreak.

Bird owners should report unexpected death losses, severe illness affecting the flock, or signs of disease in birds, including gasping, muscular tremors or paralysis to their state Department of Agriculture.

Producers Learn About Economy, Pests At Chester County Conference

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU
Lancaster Farming Staff

GUTHRIESVILLE (Chester Co.) — Recently producers gathered for a four-day mid-winter conference addressing various aspect of agriculture. The 2003 Southeast Pennsylvania Crops Conference was sponsored by Penn State Cooperative Extension and various ag industries.

More than 60 producers attended the meeting conducted in Guthriesvillle. Other locations included Allentown, Creamery, and Leesport.

Lou Moore, ag economics professor at Penn State, opened the day with a presentation about what the future holds for local producers. The ag economy has been affected by the abundance of milk, meat, and eggs, sluggish exports, and a deep drought.

In addition, U.S. crop production continues rise, even with the challenge of last year's drought, and Moore looks for the long-term trend for yields "to continue to go up," he said.

On the national level, net farm income for 2002 was $36.2 billion. Close to half — $17 billion — came from government payments. "We can't afford not to bother with the program," he said.

As for the future, "the good thing is that we've been getting rains, so a drought is less likely," said Moore. However the corn belt of the U.S. is still dry (water levels are at almost-record lows) "so it looks like next year corn production could be down in those areas," said Moore.

He also commented on the Farm Bill — a legislative measure that costs each consumer four cents per meal each day. "I think of it as an investment because we're producing it (food) cheaper than we'd be selling it to consumers otherwise," he said.

At the conference in Guthriesville, speakers included, from left, Lou Moore, Penn State; Phil Staudt, PDA; Joanne Whalen, University of Delaware; and Blair Hower, PDA.

Moore advised that producers go to their local Farm Service Agency office to maximize the benefits — "don't try to operate without partnering in the farm programs."

Blair Hower, PDA, discussed pesticide storage, security, and disposal, a program developed the Penn States pesticide education program.

In view of the threats posed to our country, pointed out Hower, PDA has requested stepped-up vigilance from producers, who should immediately report suspicious activity.

Hower also advised that producers keep copies of labels for each product. Websites bluebooktor.com and greenbook.net also hold useful label information.

To avoid cross-contamination, producers should store different types of containers separately from each other.

"This is particularly important with herbicides," he said. Storing dry materials above liquids eliminates problems in case of a leak. Using metal shelves (which will not absorb product and clean easily) is also preferable to wood.

Maintain an updated product inventory with product names, date of purchases, quantity, an location in storage area, said Hower. In addition, application equipment stored off site should be locked and disabled.

Joanne Whalen, University of Delaware, discussed insect pest management, since "knowing a little bit about potential pests can go a long way," she said.

First on Whalen's list was the seed corn maggot, a fly that overwinters as a pupae and can emerge as early as February. The pest prefers moist, freshly-plowed soil with plenty of decaying organic material to lay eggs.

The eggs hatch in 1-9 days and feed on the field's seeds, effectively killing the seeds or causing poor germination for the seeds. The flies are more of a problem on no-till fields.

Cheap, effective hopper-box treatments "might be the way I would go at this point," said Whalen.

Wireworms also feed on seeds, besides the roots and growing plant. They overwinter as a larvae and may stay in the soil for up to five years as a larvae. The adult form of wireworms are click beetles, which emerge in the summer.

They also prefer high organic matter content in the soil. Seed treatments generally provide better control than liquid and granular insecticides, said Whalen.

A producer can identify the work of grubs if the fields plants are uneven — a poor-doing plants scattered among more robust neighbors. The adult is the Japanese beetle.

A grub may also spend multiple years in the soil. Conditions favoring grubs are rotations behind pastures and double cropped soybeans.

They affect corn but "we are starting to see activity in soybeans, too," she said. Seed treatments can work under low to modest pressure.

Cutworms eat the base of the plant and leaves, and may emerge as early as March. Tank-mixing insecticides with herbicides can be used for control, applied immediately before planting.

Whalen is cautious about new seed treatments used for controlling cutworms, she said. Cutworm control seems to work well on small worms, but may not give complete control if worms are large at planting tie of the population is high.

"Producers still need to scout and treat if threshold levels are present," she said.

Slugs, which overwinter as eggs, feed on the whole plant. They prefer cool, wet springs and no-till conditions. Good seed slot closure — "making sure the pressure wheels really close the furrow because they'll go right down that furrow" — she said, is essential.

Baits tend to work better for slugs than treating.The soybean cyst nematode — identified by tiny cysts on the root and yellow, stunted plants — can be controlled with crop rotation or resistant varieties of plants. Small grains, corn, and sorghum are non-hosts, according to Whalen, who recommended a minimum of two years using non-host crops or resistant varieties.

"Rotation, rotation, rotation — if I was a nematologist, that's what Id be up here saying to you," she said.

Phil Staudt, PDA, gave an updated on Pennsylvania's ongoing ChemSweep program. "You can still get rid of unwanted pesticides," he said.

In approximately 10 years, officials have disposed of more than one million pounds of pesticide through the program.

The program costs the user nothing, as it is funded mainly by the registry of products by chemical companies, according to Staudt.

"Check your particular site, if you have any of that material that you want to get rid of," he urged the audience. "Your responsibility in this program basically is advising us to what you have," he said. "You bring it in to the office and from there it is our responsibility."

The material is sent to an incinerator.

Producers received two core and two category pesticide credits for the day's session.

Be A Good Steward: Control Weeds, Forage Pests, Pesticides

SANDRA LEPLEY
Somerset Co. Correspondent

BERLIN (Somerset Co.) —"We don't only want to produce the greatest profit in our farming businesses, we also want to be good stewards of the land," said Sjoerd Duiker, an assistant professor for the Department of Crop and Soil Science at Penn State who spoke to a group of Somerset County farmers recently at Somerset County Crops Day in Berlin.

Duiker was one of several experts in agriculture who gave Somerset County farmers updated and relevant research and information at the Berlin Community Center.

How to be a "good steward" of the land in terms of controlling weeds and forage pests with pesticide control while still being aware of the environment became the focus for the annual meeting.

Duiker, who is originally from Holland, spoke to the group about cover crops and how to use cover crops to improve soil, soil tilth, reduce erosion and fix nitrogen.

"This not only helps farmers learn about how to improve their operation but it also helps farmers become aware of new regulations and raises environmental awareness at the same time," said Duiker.

Melanie Barkley, agricultural extension agent from Bedford County coordinated the all-day event, where speakers from Penn State Cooperative Extension and the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy discussed new techniques for crop management as well as ways in which to protect the environment.

She explained that commodity prices have been remaining steady or dropping as compared to the cost of production so farmers need to work more cost effectively and efficiently to make more informed decisions about their businesses.

"The farmers are here today for two reasons," she said "First of all, agriculture is continually changing and the farmers here today are getting some updated, researched information and second, they are also able to update their private pesticide license with credits."

Marvin H. Hall, professor of forage management at Penn State who spoke on the topic of "Common Forage Pests in Pennsylvania," explained in an interview after his discussion that the olden days when farming might have been more of a "good old boys" network is over.

"Farming is a business and it is essential that the farmers stay on top of that business by coming to workshops such as this," said Hall.

He also discussed the Timothy mite, which is a pest that gets on timothy in the spring and makes it look like it is drought-stressed. This pest has just recently entered Pennsylvania and may show up in the Somerset County area this year. It has already been located in Virginia and Maryland and parts of New York state.

"Hopefully, the farmers here will never see the Timothy Mite but it is good to be prepared for it if and when it hits," he said.

In addition to the speakers mentioned, Tom Zundle from Blair County Cooperative Extension and Ben Wright of the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy also spoke.

For Deborah Knapp of the Central City area, getting some updated information and learning about new research in the agricultural arena is why she decided to attend Somerset County Crops Day.

Knapp, who has an agricultural science degree from Penn State University, has within the past year moved back to Somerset County after her and her husband Michael and their family traveled throughout the U.S. while he served in the U.S. Army. He retired as a lieutenant colonel last year and they recently purchased the family farm. She attended Crops Day with her father Marlin Shaffer.

"Growing up, I worked with beef cattle and took them to the local fair and learned to appreciate and value that in my life and now I want my children to be exposed to that," said Knapp. "For now, I am looking for my niche in terms of what I will grow on the farm. I need to study what the market is, and Somerset County Crops Day has helped me in terms of awareness and updated research."

Bull Evaluation Shows 84-Day Test Results

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Acting Agriculture Secretary Dennis Wolff today announced that 77 bulls on the 2002-03 Performance Evaluation Test at the Livestock Evaluation Center have passed the 84-day mark of their evaluations.

"Pennsylvania Agriculture continues to lead as we enter the 21st century," said Acting Secretary Wolff. "To stay competitive, Pennsylvania must maintain the excellence of its breeding programs, one way to do that is through the use of proven genetics."

Bulls were placed on test on Oct. 29 at the PDA Livestock Evaluation Center in State College, Centre County, and over the course of 112 days will be evaluated for average weight gain, feed efficiency, and genetic potential.

Based on the performance of the bulls, the Livestock Evaluation Center can objectively determine their hereditary potential.

The resulting offspring are more efficient and have more genetic potential for the producer.

Angus: 41 Bulls, 4.18 ADG, 3.37 Wt./ DOA

Charolais: 4 Bulls, 4.13 ADG, 3.67 Wt./ DOA

Hereford: 6 Bulls, 3.46 ADG, 3.24 Wt./ DOA

Limousin: 1 Bull, 2.48 ADG, 2.71 Wt./ DOA

Shorthorn: 1 Bull, 3.60 ADG, 3.09 Wt./ DOA

Simmental: 24 Bulls, 3.87 ADG, 3.48 Wt./ DOA

At the conclusion of the test, the bulls will be offered for sale on March 28 at the Ag Arena, University Park, Centre County.

The most recent census data shows income from Pennsylvania beef production on 28,000 farms was $409.7 million, an increase of 6.7 percent from the previous year.

For more information on the Livestock Evaluation Center, the Bull Performance Test, or Pennsylvania's beef industry, contact the Department of Agriculture at (717) 787-4737 or Glenn Eberly at the Department's Livestock Evaluation Center (814) 238-2527.

Satellite Program To Provide Basics Of Pond Management

MONTROSE (Susquehanna Co.)—Ponds can provide many recreational benefits to homeowners, but they have their share of problems, says a water resources specialist in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences "Some may develop leaks or fill with sediment," says Extension Associate Bryan Swistock. "The water may be muddy, or choked with weeds and algae. And sometimes, that big fish you hoped would be there for the kids to catch just doesn't materialize."

To address the basics of pond management, experts from Penn State, the Pennsylvania Fish and Boat Commission and Mansfield University will offer a live satellite clinic from 7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Feb. 27. The program will be aired locally at the County Office Building in Montrose through Penn State Cooperative Extension, of Susquehanna County. The actual program will begin at 7 p.m.

Swistock recommends that people who own a pond develop a management strategy depending on their goals. "How you manage your pond depends on your goals," he explains. "People who want a pond for swimming, for instance, usually want a clean, sandy bottom without many weeds. But if you want a good fishery, you'll need some plants and structures."

During the program, the experts will offer tips and advice on common pond problems and proper management. Attendees will be able to ask questions by telephone and fax.

"The most frequent questions involve the control of aquatic plants and weeds," says Swistock, "so we'll spend time discussing how to identify and control nuisance plants and algae. We also get a lot of questions about fisheries, so we'll discuss the best kinds of fish to stock, the species to avoid and how to harvest to keep the populations balanced." Other topics will include getting permits, general pond maintenance and testing water quality.

Professional pesticide applicators can receive re-certification credits for attending the program. The clinic is free, but pre-registration is required. For more information on the satellite program or on pond management, contact the Susquehanna County office of Penn State Cooperative Extension at (717) 278-1158.

Rodale Institute Launches Organic Farm Price Index

KUTZTOWN (Berks Co.) — The Rodale Institute recently announced the launch of a first-ever wholesale price index of certified organic foods—The New Farm Organic Price Index (OPX). Now organic farmers will be able to sell their products competitively, according to what the same grain or vegetable, for example, is being sold for across their marketing region.

This index marks an important milestone for the burgeoning organic foods market, the fastest-growing segment of the food industry. Organic producers will benefit from market data such as is available in the markets for conventional foodstuffs, with pricing tools necessary for running their businesses profitably. The OPX will enable them to price their products fairly and avoid being victims of pricing deceptions.

OPX will track prices of selected produce, grains, dairy products, and meats that are organically grown or raised in the U.S. The price data—updated weekly—will be drawn from the best-available public and private sources. The index will give farmers the baseline information they need to negotiate more successfully in the dynamic organic marketplace. OPX will be available free-of-charge on www.newfarm.org, the new version of The Rodale Institute's former publication, The New Farm Magazine. The website targets progressive farmers and their supporters worldwide,

"The New Farm Organic Price Index will serve as a vital tool for expanding the organic food market by providing much needed pricing information which has never before been tracked effectively in the organic industry," said Anthony Rodale, chairman of The Rodale Institute. "We believe OPX will strengthen the market for organic foods, and a strong market for organic foods positively impacts many aspects of life beyond agriculture; it regenerates the soil and enhances human health and the health of the community at large."

Local Student To Take Part In International Livestock Congress

HOUSTON, Texas—Bart Gill, son of Gary and Trudy Gill, Newport, and a junior at Penn State University, Main Campus, recently received the International Stockmen's Educational Foundation Travel Fellowship to the 2003 International Livestock Congress in Houston, Texas, February 24-28.

The travel fellowship was awarded to 25 students from nine countries including Australia, Bolivia, Canada, Costa Rica, Ireland, Namibia, Paraguay, Uruguay, and the United States.

Supported by the Bob and Vivian Smith Foundation, students are selected by a multi-national selection committee, with half of the 25 recipients representing international students.

Fellowships include airfare, ground transportation, hotel, and scheduled meals during the International Livestock Congress.

Scholastic achievement, leadership experiences, and letters of recommendation are all part of the stringent qualifying requirements.

This setting provides the students with the opportunity to interact with world industry leaders and contribute to the solutions that will shape the advancement of the livestock industry into the next millennium.

Following their experiences, students are required to write a professional paper of not more than 12 pages to be submitted to the International Stockmen's Educational Foundation board and to their respective schools department heads.

Bart Gill

Papers are also published in the event proceedings and on the International Livestock Congress web site.

- Attendance – This year we made a lot of changes. The two primary ones were adding 375,000 sq ft to our building (in less than one year) and added 2 ½ days to our show. I fully anticipated that with these two major changes we would drive attendance by 20%. What truly happened was that our attendance increased by 75% to approximately 850,000 from 500,000 in the past. This has never happened in North America before (Keep in mind Super Bowl attendance is 67,000)
- International Recognition – the International Association of Fairs and Expo's annually presents a total of 13 Agriculture Awards to events that are members of the Organization This year the Farm Show Complex received 4 of the 13.

Penn State Team Wins National Collegiate Beef Quiz Bowl

UNIVERSITY PARK, (Centre Co.) — A team of four students from Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences was named National Collegiate Beef Quiz Bowl champion in late January at the National Cattlemen's Beef Association's annual convention in Nashville, Tenn.

Team members — all seniors majoring in animal sciences — are Lori Connelly of Pennsylvania Furnace, a graduate of State College Area High School; LeeAnn Tice of Middlebury Center, a graduate of Cowanesque Valley High School; Sarah Kreiser of Annville, a graduate of Annville Cleona High School; and Jennifer Flinchbaugh of York, a graduate of Dallastown Area High School. Faculty member Dan Kniffen accompanied the team to Tennessee.

"We couldn't be more proud of our quiz bowl team members and their performance in this highly competitive event," says Robert Steele, dean of the college. "Our college places a great value on the benefits our students get from competing in regional and national events, and it's wonderful to see their hard work earn them this national recognition."

Teams competing in the national quiz bowl qualified by winning regional competitions in the American Society of Animal Science "Quadratholon." Winning the event is nothing new for the Nittany Lions; Penn State represented the Northeast in 10 of the last 11 years and won the quiz bowl in 1993, 1995, 1996, 2000 and 2001. It finished second in 1998 and 1999.

The quiz bowl is sponsored by the National Cattlemen's Foundation, a charitable institution whose mission is to promote the future of the beef industry.

Pro Ag Takes Dairy Issues To Washington

MESHOPPEN (Wyoming Co.)—Recently, several members of the Progressive Agriculture Organization (Pro Ag) traveled to Washington D.C. in an effort to convince members of Congress that congressional action must be immediately taken to correct the pricing inequities facing dairy farmers across the U.S.

Joining the Pro Ag group was Kathy Ozer, executive director of the National Family Farm Coalition and staff member Molly Spence.

The meeting in Washington was hosted by Mike Oscar, legislative assistant to Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) and Josh Stahl, legislative assistant to Rep. Don Sherwood (R-Pa.). Also in attendance were many Senate and Representative aides.

The thrust of the meeting centered on inadequate milk prices paid to dairy farmers and drought relief payments. Arden Tewksbury, manager of Pro Ag, told the group that Congress and the USDA must decide if they intend to maintain our family farmers style of farming or if they intend to continue pricing practices that force our family farmers out of business.

Some of the aides present informed the group that legislation will be introduced to allow interstate dairy compacts. Again, the Pro Ag group reminded everyone that the industry needs a comprehensive dairy bill that will help dairy farmers across the U.S. This bill must be structured to cover the dairy farmers' cost of production.

Gerald Carlin, a member of Pro Ag, challenged the USDA's figures, indicating that American dairy farmers were producing too much milk (Carlin showed figures indicating that the U.S. is a milk producing deficit country).

Tewksbury told the group that figures indicate nearly 10 billion pounds of milk equivalent is imported by the U.S. An official of the USDA related their figures indicated that imports make up 8 percent-9 percent of the milk in the U.S. and their figures are a factor in the low milk prices.

Mary Waters from the USDA indicated the department was optimistic regarding the possibility of making drought payments to agriculture producers that were shortchanged last fall. These payments would be made to farmers in Fayette, Green, and Tioga counties in Pennsylvania, as well as counties in other states. Sen. Thad Cochran has a disaster bill introduced that could also alleviate some of the problems caused by last year's drought.

Another meeting Feb. 18 will consist of additional congressional aides from various sections of the country.

Pro Ag can be reached at (570) 833-5776.

County-Level Results Of State Equine Census Announced

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — County-level data collected from Maryland's first-ever official count of horses, ponies, and mules reveal that 79 percent of the 87,100 equine animals in Maryland are located in 10 northern and central counties on 78 percent of the acreage used for equine purposes.

The top five counties by number of equine reported are: Baltimore (10,630), Montgomery (8,470), Frederick (8,290), Prince George's (7,420), and Harford (7,390).

"Horses are big business in Maryland and we are one of a very few states to have conducted such a detailed study of the industry so that we can begin to understand its impacts locally," said Agriculture Secretary Hagner R. Mister. "This information shows the size and diversity of this important industry in areas throughout the state."

County-level ranking of the industry by acreage and value follows the inventory closely but not exactly.

For example, Baltimore County ranked first in all categories while Frederick County ranked second in equine-related acreage (22,000) but only seventh in value of horses ($47.3 million). Kent County did not rank in the top 10 in any category, except in the value of its horses, which is reported at $29 million.

"We now see that the northern and central counties account for the largest portion of the industry and that equines are important at some level to every county in the state," said Norman Bennett, state statistician for the Maryland Agricultural Statistics Service, which conducted the census on behalf of the Maryland Horse Industry Board.

"Breed-specific information validates the importance of the racing industry as well as other competitive and recreational equine activities."

Thoroughbreds (28,800) and Standardbreds (5,800) primarily associated with horse racing account for 40 percent of all breeds.

Light breeds such as the Morgan, Arabian, Quarter Horse, and American Saddle, most commonly associated with recreational and non-racing competitive activities, make up 42,000 animals or 48 percent of all breeds. Draft breeds, ponies, mules, donkeys and burros make up the balance of the 87,100 animals.

"This study can be utilized by horsemen and government planners at the state level, and equally as important, at the county level," said Gregory W. Gingery, chairman of the Maryland Horse Industry Board. "Many horsemen's concerns such as zoning and land conservation are local issues."

Statewide, the horse census reveals an industry with assets valued at $5.2 billion and annual expenditures of $766 million. There are more than 87,000 horses, ponies, mules, donkeys and burros in over 20,000 locations around the state on 206,000 acres.

Census forms were mailed this summer to 23,000 potential horse owners and stable operators in all segments of the industry from racing to recreational riding. The results reflect the number of equine animals in Maryland in the fall of 2002 and expenses and assets during the previous year.

Sec. Veneman Tells Cattlemen President To Propose $3.9 Billion For Conservation Programs

NASHVILLE, Tenn. —During an address to cattle producers and ranchers at the National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA) annual convention, USDA Secretary Ann M. Veneman announced that President Bush will propose a record $3.9 billion, an increase of $582 million over the FY 2003 level, for conservation programs to strengthen environmental stewardship on the nation's farmlands.

The Secretary said the FY 2004 funding request is $1.9 billion higher, or more than double the funding for these activities, when the Bush Administration came into office just two years ago. She also announced the release of proposed rules for the Environmental Quality Incentives Program (EQIP).

"This Administration has worked hard to ensure strong environmental programs are available to our nation's farmers and ranchers," said Veneman. "Farmers and ranchers are the best stewards of the land and we will continue to ensure these programs are administered effectively and in the best interest of producers and the environment."

Nearly $3.5 billion of the President's record-level proposal will be used for financial assistance or other direct payments to farmers. Highlights of the budget include:

•$2 billion for the Conservation Reserve Program for rental and other costs on new and old acreage, an increase of approximately $140 million over 2003;

•$850 million will be provided for the EQIP program, a $255 million increase above FY 2003;

•$250 million for the Wetlands Reserve Program to enroll an additional 178,000 acres;

•$112 million for the Farmland Protection Program, which is $27 million over the 2003 level;

•$85 million for the Grassland Reserve Program, a $13 million increase over 2003:

•$51 million for Ground and Surface Water Conservation, a $6 million increase over 2003;

•$42 million for the Wildlife Habitat Incentives Program, an increase of $16 million over 2003;

•$19 million for the new Conservation Security Program on which an Advanced Notice of Proposed Rule (ANPR) is expected shortly; and

•$8 million for water conservation and water quality enhancements in the Klamath Basin of Oregon and California.

This budget ensures that all of the cost-share and technical assistance conservation work authorized by the 2002 farm bill for FY 2004 will be delivered. USDA will use an additional $432 million, through a new Farm Bill Technical Assistance account, to ensure farmers and ranchers can access the technical work necessary to fully utilize the conservation programs' financial assistance. This new account, which the Administration initially proposed for FY 2003 at $333 million, is necessary because of a statutory cap that restricts USDA's ability to pay for technical assistance from farm program funds.

"In the short time this Administration has been in office, we are more than doubling our investment in environmental and conservation programs that not only benefit farmers and ranchers, but communities throughout the country," said Veneman. "This record-level request illustrates the priority the President places on conserving natural resources by providing landowners the tools they need for private land management.

The Secretary also announced that the proposed rule for EQIP, reauthorized in the 2002 Farm Bill, is being released today for publication in the Federal Register for public comment. This will allow farmers and ranchers the ability to utilize program funding in the coming year.

Highlights of the revised EQIP proposal include a reduction in the amount of planning requirements needed to develop a contract; provides up to 90 percent cost share for limited resource and beginning producers; provides livestock producers with cost share assistance for waste storage facilities regardless of size, but must develop and implement a comprehensive nutrient management plan; allowance of producers to have more than one contract per tract at any given time; allocates 60 percent of EQIP funds towards livestock related practices; and, eliminates the program's dual administration by delegating EQIP to the Natural Resources Conservation Service.

"Conservation incentive programs for working lands, in combination with technical assistance, help reduce the regulatory burden on farmers and ranchers faced with air and water quality restrictions," Veneman said. "The team at USDA has worked to ensure these proposed rules are producer-friendly and will achieve the intended results of these programs." Comments on the EQIP proposal will be accepted for 30 days after publication.

During her remarks, Secretary Veneman also discussed other issues of importance to cattle producers, including animal disease protection programs, risk management tools, trade, food safety, country-of-origin labeling, and forest management.

Seminar Examines Agriculture's Past, Present, Future

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

BLUE BALL (Lancaster Co.) — To help agriculturalists understand and meet changing demands, Blue Ball National Bank hosted its 20th agricultural seminar, Feb. 5, at the Blue Ball Fire Company.

For 41 years, Glenn Shirk served as the Lancaster County dairy extension agent. Now retired, Shirk recapped the changes he has seen.

When Shirk first came to the county, two-thirds of the farms where operated by non-Amish. The average herd size was 39.

That has switched. Now two-thirds of county farmers are Amish. Farm size, milk marketing, biotechnology, and free marketing economy is changing the way business is conducted.

Niche marketing has become more important.

Profit margins must be thoroughly examined to remain viable. Shirk and Charles Few, trust development officer for the bank, explained how interest rates affect investments.

Because interest earnings are at an all time low, people are being enticed to participate in get-rich scams and are being scammed in the process.

Few stressed the importance of working with financial people you know and trust.

Advantages and disadvantages of the swine industry were explored by Robert Ruth, president of Country View Family Farms, Middletown.

In dealing with negative community response toward pig operations, Ruth said issues are often based on misconceptions.

On the aroma issue that pigs smell, Ruth encouraged farmers to invite neighbors to see their operation. In reality, Ruth said, pig operations don't smell bad except when manure is spread.

Ruth said only five percent of the population is against the hog industry. "The others are for us," he said.

Some of the audience expressed concern that the hog industry will grow in the Midwest and hurt Pennsylvania operations.

Ruth said, "When you compare costs, land, corn, and buildings — all are more expensive here but the cost of production in Pennsylvania is still cheaper when compared with other states. The West can't produce and ship here cheaper than us."

Ruth who has been affiliated with agriculture in many states and in various parts of the world believes that the future of agriculture in Pennsylvania is good.

Other speakers include Kenneth Bailey and Lou Moore who examined dairy marketing and how it relates to the Farm Bill and agriculture's outlook in Pennsylvania and the world.

Follow These Options To Manage Used Agricultural Plastics

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — The following are options for managing used agricultural plastics:

Your options today:

Option 1. Open Burn On-site

This option is unacceptable. however, state law does allow farmers to burn waste products from the production of agricultural commodities, which includes used plastics.

Municipalities are adopting open burning ordinances that override state laws and prohibit burning of plastics by farmers.

Burning plastics results in high concentrations of various air pollutants, especially when allowed to smolder.

If you feel you must burn, at least ensure that your fire is as clean as possible by following these guidelines.

- Remove ash from previous burn. Wet ashes and plugged air inlets create poor conditions for complete combustion to occur.
- Burn it as hot as you can. Add sticks or scrap lumber to promote combustion. Smoldering fires have flame temperatures that are 400-600°F or less, releasing many products of incomplete combustion.
- Give it plenty of air. If you're using a barrel, make sure there are plenty of air holes. Better than a barrel, use a burner with a grate for good aeration.
- Do not let it smolder. Pollution increases when a fire smolders.

Option 2. Bury or Dump On-site

This option is unacceptable. Farm dumps are becoming liabilities, especially when transferring title to the farm. Banks, realties, and various lending agencies are looking critically at the farm dump as an environmental concern.

Environmental professionals conducting environmental site assessments (ESAs) on farmland during title transfers may uncover more liability than the seller can afford.

Costs can exceed $10,000 for laboratory tests alone.

Option 3. Haul to Recycling Facility

Recyclers or reprocessors have certain requirements before accepting your plastics:

- Keep plastic types separate. Most plastics don't mix when they're melted during recycling. If you don't know the type plastic you're working with, ask your supplier.
- Ship large quantities. Reprocessing centers only accept truckload quantities of 30,000-40,000 pounds.
- Must be baled or palleted. Plastic should be baled or pallet-wrapped to fill a semi-trailer for shipment. Bale sizes vary, but are typically 800-1,200 pounds.
- Keep items clean and dry. Reprocessors typically allow one to four percent contamination by weight. Loads are often rejected if they're dirty. Suggestions are to: store bales indoors off the floor; remove debris from inside bales, such as material, rags, tape, moisture, mud/soil, paper, cardboard, or paperboard; discard other plastics like polystyrene (Styrofoam) or polyurethane (foam rubber); wipe off any oil or grease; band with plastic strapping, not steel banding, twine or rope. Currently polystyrene trays and flats are being accepted from Pennsylvania for recycling in Canada.

Truckload quantities (about 26 pallets, shrink-wrapped) will be picked up free of charge and you will receive $80 per ton of resin recycled.

Contact: Canadian Polystyrene Recycling Association, 7595 Tranmere Drive, Mississauga, Ontario L5S 1L4, phone, (905) 612-8290.

Option 4. Haul to Waste-to-Energy Facility

This is a great way to manage plastic wastes.

Waste-to-energy (WTE) facilities convert the high heat energy of plastics to steam, which in turn generates electricity.

This is a great way to gain a second life from your wastes.

The high burn temperatures in these facilities achieve over 99.9 percent complete combustion.

Their popularity has been hampered by negative public perceptions associated with stinky smokestacks from old, obsolete incinerators.

Today, emissions have been regulated to the point that they are hardly perceptible, and certainly not in concentrations that are toxic downwind from the facility. WTEs are safe.

Option 5. Hire Waste Hauler

Farmers are hesitant to pay a private waste hauler to remove trash. However, this is often the option that might best suit your situation. Most of this material is landfilled.

To minimize pollution, all landfills today are sealed top and bottom, and many have leachate and gas collection systems.

Landfill gas is used to supply energy needs in the area.

Your Options Tomorrow:

Option 1. Produce Fuel Nuggets

Penn State has developed a process to densify dirty plastics into fuel nuggets. The nuggets are designed to be co-fired with coal in existing boilers.

The end-use can be for agricultural boilers or for small community boilers designed to burn coal.

The nuggets can be made either on the farm or in small industrial settings, thus consuming the energy close to the plastic supply.

The benefit of the system is that it converts an annoying waste into a valuable fuel, with a minimum of energy expended in the process.

Option 2. Haul to Waste-to-Energy Facility

As mentioned earlier, these facilities are very efficient at converting wastes to energy. As coal and petroleum reserves dwindle, these facilities will inevitably become more commonplace.

CHAMBERSBURG (Franklin Co.)—The Franklin County Turf Meeting, Tuesday, Feb. 18 will focus on weed, insect, and disease control, plus there will be a session on marketing and a discussion of last year's drought.

The turf meeting will help to keep farmers current with industry changes and they can get the PDA pesticide registration credits they need.

The meeting will be conducted at the Franklin County cooperative extension office in Chambersburg from 8:30 a.m. to 2:45 p.m. The cost of the program is $25.00 per person and includes lunch, snacks, and all program materials. Pre-registration is required.

Spring Decisions For Agricultural Producers

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.)—Current economic conditions in the farm community dictate that farmers in Pennsylvania take action to minimize risk.

"There are two steps that farmers can take right now that will be well worth their time," said Richard Pallman, state executive director of the Pennsylvania Farm Service Agency (FSA).

The FSA is enrolling farmers into the Direct and Countercyclical Payment Program (DCP). The DCP is designed to be an equitable means of assistance for growers of agricultural feeds and grains. This program provides grain producers with the best price protection program afforded farmers in several years.

Two forms of benefits are made available in DCP. A guaranteed direct payment is made each year at an established payment rate. Additional payments are issued when market prices are low—this is called a "countercyclical (CC) payment."

"DCP participation guarantees farm operations direct payments—regardless of market prices—and countercyclical payments—depending on national average market prices. This is a safety net that producers cannot afford to miss," said Pallman.

The first step is deciding whether to update your base and yield for the 1998-2001 time period. Two decisions go hand-in-hand. First, whether to update your base or freeze it at the existing 2002 production flexibility contract (PFC) base. In either case, you can add eligible oilseed acres. Second, whether to freeze your yields at the existing 2002 PFC levels or update your countercyclical (CC) payment yields for all covered commodities on the farm.

If you did not have a PFC for 2002, then it becomes very important for you to go to your FSA office and establish your bases. The county FSA committee will assign a direct payment yield to each farm with history acres for the period 1998-2001 but was not on a PFC for 2002.

Growers need to visit FSA as soon as possible to choose a base and yield option which will be the basis of their participation through 2007. It should be noted that since the benefits available for the next six years will be based on historical plantings, this one-time, first step in the process is very important.

Deadline for base and yield selections is April 1, 2003. Should producers who were not previous PFC participants miss this deadline, they will be ineligible for the price protection this Farm Bill provides through DCP.

Should previous PFC participants miss this deadline, DCP benefits for the remainder of this Farm Bill will be based on existing base and yield information, and they will have lost the opportunity to make adjustments in their favor.

The second step is for producers to sign a contract for program participation. June 2, 2003, is the final date to sign a DCP contract for 2002 and 2003 participation. Sign-up will be conducted annually for each of the four remaining program years.

Producers not participating in the DCP will not be eligible for direct and countercyclical payments. Producers who do not participate in the DCP program, however, will be eligible for commodity loans and LDPs when they are available.

It is important to start the process now because sign-up activities may require that you make more than one visit to FSA.

FSA will assist growers throughout the sign-up process; however, you can greatly speed up the process by doing your homework. Review the information mailed to you concerning the planting history and yields assigned to your farm. If information is missing or inaccurate, you can take certain steps to correct it. Evidence to substantiate plantings for the years 1998 through 2001 is still being accepted by FSA. Updating your history could greatly impact future program benefits.

Sign-up activities require that many growers visit the office more than once. Please contact the office for an appointment prior to your visit. Office staff can then prepare for the visit to greatly speed the process.

Pennsylvania Farmers Union Receives Farm Aid Grant

BLOOMSBURG (Columbia Co.)—Pennsylvania Farmers Union has received a $5,000 grant from the Farm Aid Foundation to help promote its mission of strengthening the family farm system of agriculture by keeping family farmers on the land to produce America's food.

Larry Breech, president of Pennsylvania Farmers Union, announced that the grant will be used to launch the Family Farm Empowerment Project to improve farm income and independence of family farmers and ranchers and rural communities.

"The Family Farm Empowerment Project is intended to build, educate and update an effective and informed coalition of family farmers and ranchers and rural supporters to promote an economically viable family-based agriculture," Breech said. Pennsylvania Farmers Union will work with other organizations to help train individuals on how to successfully convey the benefits of a family-based system of agriculture.

"Our family farm members greatly appreciate this generous support and encouragement to help survive these trying times," Breech said. "Willie Nelson's support of this initiative and determination to the success of family farms and ranches makes this project possible."

Much of the money raised by Farm Aid was the result of a sold-out concert in September 2002 at the Post-Gazette Pavilion in Burgettstown. Farm Aid's 2002 grants, which were distributed to many farm groups across the U.S., will be used to fund a variety of programs, including emergency grants to farmers hit by low prices and weather-related disasters, legal and financial counseling to help farmers avoid foreclosure, cultivation of new direct markets for family farm produced livestock, and crops, outreach, and organizational development.

Maple Syrup: Above Average Crop Predicted

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — After last year's above average crop of maple syrup crop, an above average crop of maple syrup from western New York is predicted, due to heavy snows and lack of frozen soil. In addition, the heat and drought of the past summer promised to increase sugar production for most maple tree varieties. Consequently, there is also expected to see a good to excellent sugar content for most sap production.

Despite the drought this past summer, maple trees were healthy going into the winter. Even though the leaves turned early, there was not a lot of browning of the foliage. Heavy snow during the winter months has promoted deep subsoil moisture and has promoted good tree health during the winter months.

We soon expect a winter thaw (temperatures above 32 degrees) for a three to four day period which may trigger the first run of sap for many sugar bush operations.

Above average snowfall has contributed to saturation of most soils and for most areas the soil is not frozen. Consequently a winter thaw to promote an initial heavy sap flow for most area producers is expected.

For 2002, the season opened on February 22 and closed on March 29.

This was the earliest tapping since records began in 1972. The extended season pushed yield per tap to the highest level since 1966.

This year's cold winter weather has encouraged a more normal window for tapping trees. Typically, tapping for the western New York region starts during the end of February. However, some maple syrup producers may try to tap during early February.

Ideal conditions for tapping are freezing temperatures at night and just above freezing temperatures during the day (32-40). This creates a differential in pressure of the tree to encourage sap flow. Typically, the tree will generate 12 pounds per square inch to encourage sap flow. It takes 10 to 12 gallons of sap to make one quart of syrup. In addition, good subsoil moisture will ensure an adequate supply of soil moisture for sap production as well as a differential in pressure. For many areas, we have achieved these ideal conditions for tapping trees.

We expect prices to be similar to last year as carryover stocks are low this year. Prices paid by consumers are expected to range from $25 to $45 per gallon depending on the grade of syrup.

Maple syrup production for the United States totaled an estimated 1.36 million gallons, up 29 percent from last year's production. Vermont led the U.S. with 495,000 gallons. Maine was the second leading state with a production of 230,000 gallons, 15 percent more than 2001. New York is the third in syrup production with an estimated 228,000 gallons.

Featured Recipe

Cherries won the hearts of Americans many years ago. European settlers had barely set foot in the New World before they began planting cherry trees. Early French colonists from Normandy brought cherry pits that they planted along the St. Lawrence River and beside the Great Lakes.

However, it wasn't until the late 1800's that cherry growing and harvesting began in earnest, eventually becoming a commercial enterprise.

Peter Dougherty, Presbyterian missionary, is credited with getting the U.S. cherry industry started. In 1852, he planted a group of cherry trees on the Old Mission Peninsula, near Traverse City, Michigan. Dougherty's cherry trees flourished, and soon other residents of the area planted cherry trees. The area all along Lake Michigan, from Benton Harbor to north of Traverse City, proved to be ideal for growing cherries. Lake Michigan tempered the arctic winds in winter and cooled the orchards in summer.

Today in Michigan, there are almost 4 million cherry trees, which annually produce 150 to 200 pounds of tart cherries. Michigan leads the nation in the production of tart cherries, harvesting about three-fourths of the U.S. crop. Large commercial crops of tart cherries are also grown in Utah, Wisconsin, New York, Pennsylvania, and Washington.

Cherries are much more than great tasting and colorful. Cherries contain powerful antioxidants that may help fight cancer and heart disease, according to research at Michigan State University.

Eating about 20 cherries per day could reduce inflammatory pain and headache pain.

February has been designated as National Cherry Month. Enjoy this featured recipe and many more sent in by our readers.

Confectioner's sugar glaze, optional
Mint sprig, for garnish

In medium bowl, combine flour, bran, baking powder and cinnamon; set aside. In large bowl, with electric mixer at high speed, beat margarine and sugar until creamy. Blend in eggs and milk. Stir in flour mixture until smooth (batter will be thick). Spread batter in greased 9-inch springform pan; spoon cherry filling over batter.

Sprinkle with almond bran topping. Bake in preheated 350-degree oven 50 to 55 minutes or until toothpick inserted in center tests done (filling will stick to toothpick). Cool in pan on wire rack for 25 minutes. Remove outside ring of pan; cool completely on wire rack. Drizzle with confectioner's sugar glaze; garnish with mint sprig if desired. Cut into wedges to serve.

Makes 12 servings.

Almond Bran Topping: Mix ½ cup coarsely chopped almonds, ¼ cup 100% bran cereal, 2 tablespoons sugar, and 2 tablespoons softened margarine until crumbly.

On Being a Farm Wife

Joyce Bupp

What a lovely sight.

There are few things prettier than a covering of pristine, freshly-fallen snow.

I know. I know. You're ready for green grass.

Me too.

Ready for yellow forsythia, red tulips and blue hyacinths. Ready for robins and bluebirds and white Vs of snow geese gliding north. Ready for the musky smell of earthworms and the pungent scent of skunk cabbages in the meadow swamp.

Well, maybe not the skunk cabbage.

But there are still few prettier sights than the world blanketed in freshly-fallen snow. We were reminded again of that a couple more times in recent days, as the latest sittings of the white stuff reburied slender shoots of springtime grass greening up in sheltered corners. For good measure, also covered for at least a little longer were a bunch of limp-but-living dandelion shoots I spotted as the last snow was melting, thriving despite their encasement for weeks in ice-pack insulation.

And so it is that Derra Dog, a pair of cats and I take our evening walk out under stars and a slender moon shining over the latest cover of white. For us after-dark strollers, snow enhances nighttime scenery, adding visual depth and dimension. Snow clinging to tree trunks, masses of vines, frozen foliage and dried grasses accents landscape details usually obscured by the darkness.

Shadows are also more pronounced and noticeable against the background of snow, which takes on a shade of pale gray in the early evening. Even a less-than-half moon gives off enough light against a snowy canvas to cause our little cadre of walkers to cast dark, shadowy companions, which mimic our every move.

A graceful curved area of inky black marks the entrance of underground water at the first pond. Renewed flows of the springs keep a crescent of the pond unfrozen even through the very coldest nights and the open water sparkles with reflections. Framing the breeze-rippled water is a curving rim of contrasting white snow capping the icy lids which cover most of the ponds' surfaces.

Farther along, the blanket of snow is split with a black, meandering gouge, where a tiny stream emerges in the meadow from a brief underground journey away from a pond overflow. In the shadowy world of nighttime, the stream's little ripples and mini-cascades are unseen as it silently slips it way toward the distant ocean. With a bit of imagination, it looks like a yawning chasm falling away from steep cliffs of white, rather than a simple meadow trickle.

Pale moonlight casting over the snow spotlights each of the dozens of sets of tracks criss-crossing the meadow and meandering over the frozen ponds. Often the tracks show abrupt changes in direction at key points of interest, such as a tree trunk, or a clump of dried grass. Fox, squirrel, deer, rabbits, cat, even the tracks of what appears to have been one lone heifer strolling up along the big pond, keep Derra's nose buried in the fluffy stuff, her tail busily waving as she takes a scent-check of the passersby.

On a rare occasion, she'll pause and growl at something sensed off there in the night. That generally sends our parade strolling back in the direction where we came from and the friendly light of the basement porch.

In the after-dark world of a snowy, moonlight night, not all is black and white. It's a range of subtle grays and deep blues, stark blacks, reflective glows and, sometimes, glittery diamonds sprinkled over the landscape.

And I don't ever need to know if any of the lines of meadow tracks or nighttime shadows under the bushes and hedgerows include the stripes of a skunk.

U.S. Savings Bonds: Saving for Your Future

Savings bonds are issued by the U.S. Treasury Department and offer a safe place for your savings dollars. When buying them you are making a loan to the Federal Government. There are many reasons to consider buying savings bonds.

Safety — Savings bonds are backed by the full faith and credit of the United States. Your principal and earned interest are safe and cannot be lost because of changes in the market. Because they are registered with the Treasury Department, they can be easily replaced if lost, stolen, or destroyed.

Affordability — You can buy savings bonds for as little as $25. Participants in a payroll savings plan may buy them in even smaller installments.

Tax advantages — Earnings are exempt from all state and local income taxes. Payment of federal income taxes can be deferred until the bonds are redeemed or until final maturity for Series EE and I Bonds. Earnings may be exempt from federal taxes if used to pay for qualified higher education expenses.

Accessibility — The money you place in savings bonds is available whenever you want following an initial holding period of six months from the issue date. If redeemed earlier than five years from the issue date, however, an early redemption penalty equal to the last three months of earned interest is assessed.

Convenience — You can buy savings bonds online from the savings bonds website, through a payroll savings plan, or at over 40,000 financial institutions nationwide.

As with any investment, there are both advantages and disadvantages. If cashed prematurely, bonds will not reach their face value. Other investments may provide a higher rate of return. Bonds cannot be cashed within the first 6 months after purchase. No current income is received for Series EE or I Bonds.

There are three types of savings bonds: Series EE, Series HH, and I Bonds. The Series EE Savings Bond is an accrual type of security meaning interest is added to the bond monthly and paid when the bond is cashed. They are sold at half of face value in denominations ranging from $50, to $10,000. For example, you can buy a $50 Series EE Savings Bond for $25.

Series EE Savings Bonds earn 90 percent of the average yields on five-year Treasury securities for the six months preceding the announcement of new rates. The interest earned is updated every six months. The current interest rate through April 2003 is 3.25 percent.

The Treasury Department guarantees that they will grow to reach face value in 17 years from the issue date. If market conditions do not allow this, a one-time adjustment is made to bring the bonds up to face value after which they continue to earn interest at market based rates until they reach final maturity 30 years from the issue date.

A special type of Series EE Savings Bond is the Patriot Bond. It is identical to the Series EE Bond except that it has the words "Patriot Bond" printed on it.

Series HH Savings Bonds are a current income security, meaning that interest is paid to the bondholder as it is earned rather than accruing. Every six months you receive an interest payment by direct deposit to your checking or savings account.

When redeemed, you receive only the face value of the bond.

You can acquire Series HH Savings Bonds only by exchanging eligible Series E Savings Bonds, Series EE Savings Bonds and saving notes or upon reinvestment of the proceeds of matured Series H Savings Bonds. They come in four denominations ranging from $500, to $10,000. The interest rate on Series HH Savings Bonds is set when you buy them and at 10 years from the issue date.

I Bonds are the newest type of bond designed to protect the purchasing power of the investment and earn a guaranteed real rate of return. Interest is added to the bond monthly and paid when the bond is cashed. Like Series EE bonds, they are sold at face value in denominations ranging from $50 to $10,000.

The I Bond interest is made up of two parts. One is a fixed rate that remains the same for the life of the bond. The second is an inflation adjustment that is updated every six months to track the inflation rate and is computed using the Consumer Price Index published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This protects your earnings from inflation.

Every May 1 and November 1, the Treasury Department announces the fixed rate that will be in effect for all I Bonds issued in the next six months. The current interest rate is through April 2003 is 4.08 percent.

If you buy an I Bond in January, for example, it will earn the composite rate in effect at that time. In July, after six months, the applicable interest rate will be the sum of the initial fixed rate of interest and the inflation adjustment announced the previous May. The following January, the process is repeated using the inflation adjustment announced the previous November.

Savings Bonds are owned exclusively by the person or persons named on them. They can be registered with single ownership, co-ownership, or with a named beneficiary. The Social Security number of the persons named on the bond is required. Savings bonds can be redeemed by the person whose name appears as the sole owner or a co-owner. If you are named as a beneficiary, you must present proper identification and a certified copy of the owner's death certificate.

Bonds can be redeemed at any financial institution that the Treasury Department has authorized as paying agents. Any amount of I Bond and Series EE Savings bonds can be redeemed at an institution where you have an account in good standing for at least 6 months.

Series HH Savings Bonds must be sent to your servicing Federal Reserve Bank to be redeemed. Your financial institution can help with this.

Consuming Thoughts

Penn State Extension
Home Economist for Berks Co.

Have you ever purchased a food product and found that it contains a foreign object or is less than appetizing, or actually makes you ill?

If so, you have several avenues of recourse.

For example, your hot dog has a strip of plastic inside, your canned chili contains a metal washer, you think a restaurant dinner made you ill, or a sugar-coated roach was in your box of cereal (true stories), don't hesitate to make a report to the proper agency.

The following guidelines from the Food Safety Inspection Service will help you know how to report problems, and thereby protect your health and your rights as a consumer.

For help with restaurant food problems, call the restaurant owner to report the problem. If the problem is serious, also contact the Health Department in your city, county or state.

For complaints about food products that do not contain meat or poultry — such as cereal — call or write to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

Check your local phone book under U.S. Government, Health and Human Services, to find a FDA office in your area.

The FDA's Seafood hotline is 1-888-SAFE-FOOD.

In order for the USDA to investigate a problem with meat, poultry, or egg products, you must have: 1. The original container or packaging; 2. The foreign object (the plastic strip or metal washer, for example); and 3. Any uneaten portions of the food (refrigerate or freeze it).

Information you should be ready to report to hotline personell on the phone includes the following:

- Your name, address, and phone number.
- The brand name, product name, and manufacturer of the product.
- The size and package type.
- Can or package codes (note UPC bar codes) and dates
- Establishment number (EST) usually found in the circle or shield near the "USDA passed and inspected" phrase.
- Name and location of store and date you purchased the product.
- As a courtesy gesture, it is important to inform the store and/or the product's manufacturer even if you don't choose to make a formal complaint to the USDA.

If you think you are ill, see a physician. 1. If an injury or illness allegedly resulted from use of a meat or poultry product, you will also need to tell the hotline staff about the type, symptoms, time of occurrence and name of attending health professional (if applicable). 2. If you can't reach the hotline staff or if an injury or illness allegedly resulted from restaurant food, call your local Health Department. 3. If an injury or illness allegedly resulted from non-meat food products, call or write the FDA.

The bottom line: If you sense there's a problem with any food product, report it and don't consume it.

"When in doubt, throw it out."

If food is not fit for human consumption, do not feed it to an animal.

Regional Christmas Tree Meeting Scheduled In Hazleton

HAZLETON (Luzerne Co.)— The seventeenth annual Northeast Regional Christmas Tree Growers Meeting and Trade Show will take place Saturday, March 1, at Genetti Lodge and Conference Center in Hazleton from 8:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. The meeting is sponsored by Penn State Cooperative Extension.

Topics to be discussed include the following: Agri-Tourism: Taking Choose and Cut to the Next Level; Weed Control Update; Rhabdocline Needlecast, Chemical Control Research; Canaan Fir Keepability Study; Terminal Bud Selection on Fraser Fir and Elongated Hemlock Scale.

The purpose of this meeting is to educate new and established growers on the most up-to-date cultural and marketing practices available.

Attendance at this meeting qualifies licensed pesticide applicators to receive credits towards recertification. Update training credits will be assigned by the PA Department of Agriculture. Changes in the meeting agenda may result in adjustments in the assigned credits.

There is a fee for this program and enrollment will be limited to the first 200 people who pre-register. All registrations must be postmarked by February 21, 2003.

For a registration form contact Penn State Cooperative Extension of Susquehanna County at (717) 278-1158. For additional information, contact the Carbon County cooperative extension office at (570) 325-2788.

Something For Everyone At Dairy, Silage Producer Family Day

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Learning and fun activities for the whole family dominated the annual Capital Region Dairy and Silage Producer Day at the Lebanon Valley Expo Center Thursday.

As usual a wide variety of workshops covered silage and dairy production and even offered pesticide updates, but new this year were family life workshops and day-long children's activities.

Participants could choose from the following workshops during the four separate sessions:

• Pennsylvania Saves Program and Family Financial Review — How to build wealth, not debt to become an American saver and learn basic financial record keeping taught by Sandra Hall, Lebanon extension family strengths agent, and Winifred McGee, Lebanon County Extension director.

• Backyard Composting — How to "grow" compost to enrich your garden and a chance to qualify for a free backyard compost bin. The session was taught by Master Gardener Lisa Havath.

• Soup's On — Recipes, demonstrations, gift ideas and even taste testing was a part of this workshop by Marcia Weber, York County extension agent.

• Growing Culinary Herbs in a Container — How to plant a variety of herbs to grow year-round to use in cooking was taught by Master Gardener Millie Diefenbach.

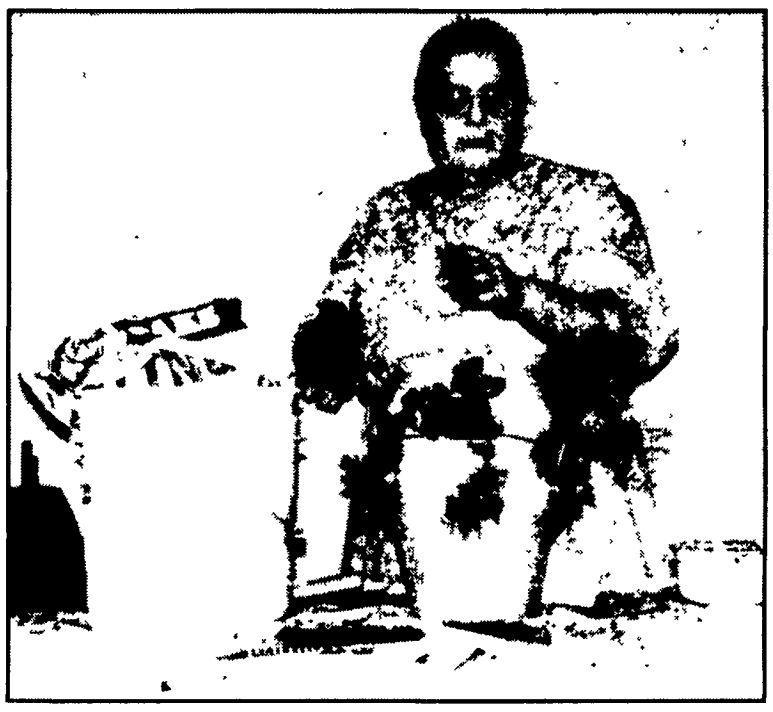
• What's New in Home Canning — Nancy Wiker, Lancaster County extension agent, reviewed the latest in proper canning techniques. Participants could even bring their dial gauge pressure canner lid and have it tested.

• Topiaries Made Easy — Master Gardener Jane Yocum taught a brief history on the ancient art of topiary. Under Yocum's instructions, workshop participants made their own Valentine topiary to take home with them.

• Desserts in Life — "Look at the word desserts again and you'll see stress," said Jane Landis, Dauphin County extension agent. She gave tips for turning life's stresses into desserts.

• Pest Control Around the House — Participants were taught how to identify and control the top three household pest groups, fall home invaders, wood feeders, and pantry pests.

Here are some instructions to duplicate some of the projects taught during the workshops.



Master Gardener Millie Diefenbach demonstrates planting a culinary herb garden in a strawberry container that is placed indoors during cold weather but can be moved outdoors during warm weather.

Topiary workshop participants wrap sheet moss around plastic-coated wire that forms the shape of a Valentine.

Backyard composting is fun, easy, and better for the environment according to Master Gardener Lisa Havath.

Planting Herbal Garden In Strawberry Jar

Master Gardener Millie Diefenbach said there are four herbal garden combinations, but select any combination of herbs you prefer to fill a container since most require medium to high light and similar watering conditions. However, basil does not grow well in pots.

For those interested the combinations include the following:

• Tea Garden — anise hyssop, mint, German chamomile and lemon balm.

• Salad Garden — Burnet, chives, nasturtium.

• Flavor Garden — Purple sage, rosemary, purple basil, parsley, and nasturtium.

• Vinegar Garden — Basil, tarragon, chives, and thyme.

For the demonstration, Millie used English thyme, lemon thyme, mint, dwarf sage, parsley, variegated oregano, and rosemary. Nasturium seeds were planted on the top since they are an edible flower and bloom profusely.

Because a strawberry jar has openings at different heights, plants cannot be watered in the traditional method. Instead a pipe with holes or a cylinder of chicken wire filled with stones is inserted in the middle of the jar before packing with planting soil. She used PVC pipe and drilled holes in it at the same spots where the strawberry jar had openings.

Fill the jar with planting soil to the level of the bottom opening. Plant herbs in the bottom layer by sticking through opening. Fill with soil to the next opening until all openings are filled with herbs, always keeping pipe centered in the container.

For the top of the jar, choose an herb that tends to spread or plant nasturium seeds or other flower seeds on top.

Fill the PVC pipe or chicken wire with coarse stones to create a filtering system that slows water flow and allows water to penetrate the hard-to-reach lower levels of the jar.

Since clay pots absorb more water, the strawberry jar should be watered every day through the PVC pipe. Feed with a liquid fertilizer in the water every two weeks.

Strawberry plants can also be planted in a strawberry jar or in a hanging basket. The plants will grow and cascade over the basket.

Valentine Topiary

Supplies needed:
Ivy plant with trails
5-inch clay pot
36-inches of 15 gauge plastic covered wire (washline)
Sheet moss soaked in water
Floral wire
Potting soil
Newspaper
Wire cutters

• Stand the wire next to the flower pot and mark where wire meets the top of the pot. Gently bend wire into heart shape beginning at the point marked. Leave excess wire for support in the pot.

• Fill pot half full with potting soil.

• Insert straight end of wire into soil. Pack loose soil tightly around wire.

• Pot a few ivy plants around base of wire. Fill in with soil.

Matt Grojewski, Womelsdorf, attends Dairy and Silage Producer Day every year. This year, he enjoyed the option of attending family workshops.

• Wring out the sheet moss and lay on newspaper to drain.

• Cut 12-inch pieces of floral wire.

• Tear sheets of moss and wrap around topiary form beginning at bottom. Secure with floral wire. Continue tearing and applying sheet moss until form is covered. Secure with floral wire.

• Wrap ivy tendrils around and up topiary form. Secure with floral wire if necessary.

Farm Bureau, Ronald McDonald Houses Celebrate Ag's Bounty

CAMP HILL (Dauphin Co.) — Pennsylvania Farm Bureau members delivered collections of food to Pennsylvania's five Ronald McDonald Houses Feb. 6 in celebration of "Food Check-out Day," the date when the average American has earned enough income to pay for an entire year's food supply.

The event has produced more than $200,000 worth of food and other contributions for Ronald McDonald Houses during the past four years.

"Pennsylvania has the largest rural population of any state in the nation, which makes it vital to have places like this for rural families to stay while they are in a city receiving medical treatment for their children," said Bill Grattan, executive director of the Pittsburgh Ronald McDonald House.

"Ronald McDonald Houses nurture the families of seriously ill children receiving medical treatment by providing them with a home-away-from-home. Our farm families nourish us all by providing the world's safest and most economical supply of food.

"Many rural families benefit from the care and comfort of a Ronald McDonald House when they travel far from home for the medical care of a child. Our annual 'Food Check-Out Day' is a perfect time and way to say thank you," said Pennsylvania Farm Bureau President Guy F. Donaldson.

"Because of the efficiency of our farm families, 98 percent of Pennsylvanians can devote their lives and careers to something other than food production. The remarkable productivity of agriculture requires large amounts of capital, science, new technology, and risk," explained the statewide leader.

The Ronald McDonald Houses involved with the Farm Bureau effort are located in Danville, Hershey, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Scranton.

"Food Check-Out Day" was launched to recognize the productivity of America's farmers and ranchers. By Food Check Out Day occurring on February 6, it will take only 37 days for the average American family to pay for its annual food supply for the year. In contrast, the same family has to work until late April to pay their tax bill.

Pennsylvania's farmers are among the nation's most productive, generating more than $4 billion in cash receipts during 2002. The Commonwealth ranks among the top five states in the production of milk, eggs, ice cream, butter, cheese, peaches, apples, pears, grapes, tomatoes, pumpkins, maple syrup and Christmas Trees, and leads nationally in the production of mushrooms. Pennsylvania Farm Bureau is a voluntary organization representing over 29,000 farm and rural families in 54 county units. It is part of the nation's largest general farm organization, the 5.5 million member American Farm Bureau Federation.

In celebration of Food Checkout Day, Bill Grattan, executive director of the Pittsburgh Ronald McDonald House, and Ronald McDonald accept donations from Pennsylvania Farm Bureau spokesperson Christine Greig, Linesville, Crawford County.

Conference Helps Farm Women Balance Their Lives

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio — Sometimes it seems like there is no possible way of balancing life on the farm, family and the daily household chores. The Women in Agriculture Conference has been helping farm women find that balance for 10 years.

This year, the conference committee is planning a special celebration for the 10th anniversary on March 14 at Nazareth Hall in Grand Rapids, Ohio from 8 a.m.-4 p.m.

Marlene von Stein, 2002-2003 Ohio FFA Association president, will open the 2003 Women in Agriculture Conference.

The keynote speaker for this year's conference is Marla Cilley, who is known to thousands as the FLYlady. Cilley is helping women to invite those unexpected guests into the house and break that never-ending cycle of housework. Cilley has appeared on NBC's Today Show and has done numerous interviews for the radio stations and publications, such as USA Today and Women's Day magazine.

Besides being inspired by Cilley, the participants will be able to attend breakout sessions. These sessions include: 2002 Farm Bill, Knowing the Right Farm Equipment Part, Easy Entertaining, Alternative Medicine and many more.

Early bird registration for the conference is $40 if postmarked before Feb. 24. Registration postmarked after the deadline is $50.

"The Women In Agriculture program began in 1993, as a need to come together to learn about their way of life. At the first conference, there were approximately 40 women in attendance. Today the educational event has grown to over 175 participants from around northwestern Ohio and southern Michigan," said Doris Herringshaw, family and consumer sciences agent for Ohio State University Extension in Wood County and Women In Agriculture committee chair.

For more information on the Women In Agriculture conference, contact the OSU Extension office of Wood County at (419) 354-9050 or the Agricultural Business Enhancement Center at (877) 767-5546.

The program is sponsored by the Women In Agriculture committee of the Ohio State University Extension Agricultural Business Enhancement Center.

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Valentine's Day has come and gone. Hopefully we are left with a few cards to show that someone remembered us. February 14, 1928, the day that I got no valentines, my sister was born and she was my valentine. Mazie died in her youth but is well remembered as a brown-eyed youngster.

She developed health problems after our big family of girls got scarlet fever. We were quarantined for eight weeks. That was a lot of school to miss, and thus I did not pass Latin that year. So, I was tutored in order to continue to study it the next year.

We had an unpleasant adventure last week as we tried to visit my sister in another county. Our car stopped running on a busy highway. We were lucky that a state trooper came along and called a tow truck for us. However, when we got to a garage, we had a very long wait. They ordered the wrong part and so instead of going to our destination, we had to turn around in order to get home by dark. We were sorry that we worried my sister's family but these things happen.

Last week we saw two red foxes playing in the meadow below our house. It is one sign that spring is not too far away. Also, on my diningroom table is a dish of blooming paper-white narcissus. I used them as a centerpiece when I had company to help us eat the big piece of lamb that our son gave us for Christmas. We also used the dark green tablecloth that his wife gave as a Christmas gift. It is too easy to simply lay away a gift and not use it. So, I made an effort to share it with others.

Apply For Dairy Of Distinction Award By April 15

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Pennsylvania dairy farms are invited to apply for this year's Dairy of Distinction award from the Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program. Applications must be submitted by April 15.

The award is based on the idea that attractive farmsteads enhance consumer confidence in the wholesomeness of milk and stimulate milk sales and public support for the industry. Dairies receiving the highest scores in each of 10 Pennsylvania districts will be awarded an 18- by 24-inch Dairy of Distinction sign to display in front of their farm

"This program is run by volunteers and recognizes the hard work and dedication of dairy producers who promote a positive image for the dairy industry," said Mike O'Connor, secretary of the Pennsylvania Dairy of Distinction program and professor of dairy science extension in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

Roadside judging will take place in May. Judges will look at factors that can be controlled by the farmer, such as clean and attractively finished buildings; neat landscaping, ditches, roads and lanes; and well-maintained fences. They also will take into account other aspects of the farm, such as cleanliness of animals,the barnyard, feed areas and manure management.

Winning farms will be notified in late June. Because this is a yearly award, previous winners are reevaluated each year to see if they are still maintaining excellent standards.

To receive an application, call Mike O'Connor at (814) 863-3913 or e-mail him at HYPERLINKmail to: MOConnor@psu.edu.

Since 1987, Pennsylvania's Dairy of Distinction Program has recognized more than 700 dairy farms. The Pennsylvania program is part of the Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program, which also includes New York, New Jersey, and Vermont Dairies in these states can contact the program secretary in their state for applications.

HOW IS YOUR FARM SCORED?

Awards will be based upon neatness, good maintenance, and other factors, which can be controlled by the farmer Attractive background scenery should not be weighed heavily in judging All judging observations should be made from a vehicle at one or more points on an adjacent public highway (or if farm is off the road, the nearest lane) Judging should give equal consideration to old wood construction and new construction of metal or concrete block

The award program may be used for subsequent advertising or promotion activities for dairy products or dairy farming. Farmers who apply for awards agree that, if selected, they will cooperate with these activities and make all reasonable efforts to maintain both the exterior and interior of their properties in an acceptable condition

HOW THE JUDGING WORKS

Judging teams will visit the farms during the month of May Farms will be judged each year as the award is presented on an annual basis Any dairy failing to maintain appearance standards will be asked to remove their sign The Dairy of Distinction signs remain the property of the committee, not the property of the dairy farmer All farms must achieve a compliance score of 90 percent on their Dairy of Distinction score card. Your cooperative or milk handler will be contacted to approve your milk quality

RULES FOR THE DAIRY OF DISTINCTION AWARD

3 The sign shall be displayed in front of the dairy at roadside. An attractive post and bracket, or other frame shall be used to display the sign No more than three signs should be displayed from the sign frame or post, and all shall be of a style, general size and quality comparable to the Dairy of Distinction sign The sign should be secured on all sides to avoid wind damage

4 Signs shall not be moved to other premises New owners of a Dairy of Distinction farm must apply to retain the sign

5. Replacement of damaged signs shall be at the discretion of the committee

6 No producer shall be charged with scoring or sign expenses

7 The judges' decision will be final

8 Judging will take place between May 1 and May 31

9 Farms awarded a Dairy of Distinction sign in previous years will be judged between April 1 and April 30 If they do not qualify, they will be rejudged between May 1 and May 31 so they have the opportunity to keep the sign

10 Farms that do not requality will return the sign to their regional Dairy of Distinction Committee

Winter Wardrobe Refreshers

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — When winter clothes need a quick pick-me-up, new timesaving products are just what the wardrobe doctor ordered.

In-dryer kits are an innovation that save time and money. The products are used in the clothes dryer to freshen a wide variety of dry-clean-only garments. Although difficult stains may still require the services of a dry-cleaning professional, these kits will help remove wrinkles, odors and light stains.

Wrinkle-releasing sprays will do the trick when ironing is not on the agenda. Although safe for most fabrics, it's necessary to read the label. Some products shouldn't be used on fabrics that water spot.

Fabric refreshers neutralize odors on hard-to-wash fabrics and soft surfaces, such as carpets, upholstery and curtains, They're also handy for wardrobe items, such as canvas shoes and tote bags, as well as bulky winter coats.

Finally, detergent and fabric softeners with color protectors can keep whites white and colors bright. The trick is to use the product from the beginning of the garment's lifetime. These products protect color, but won't restore it.

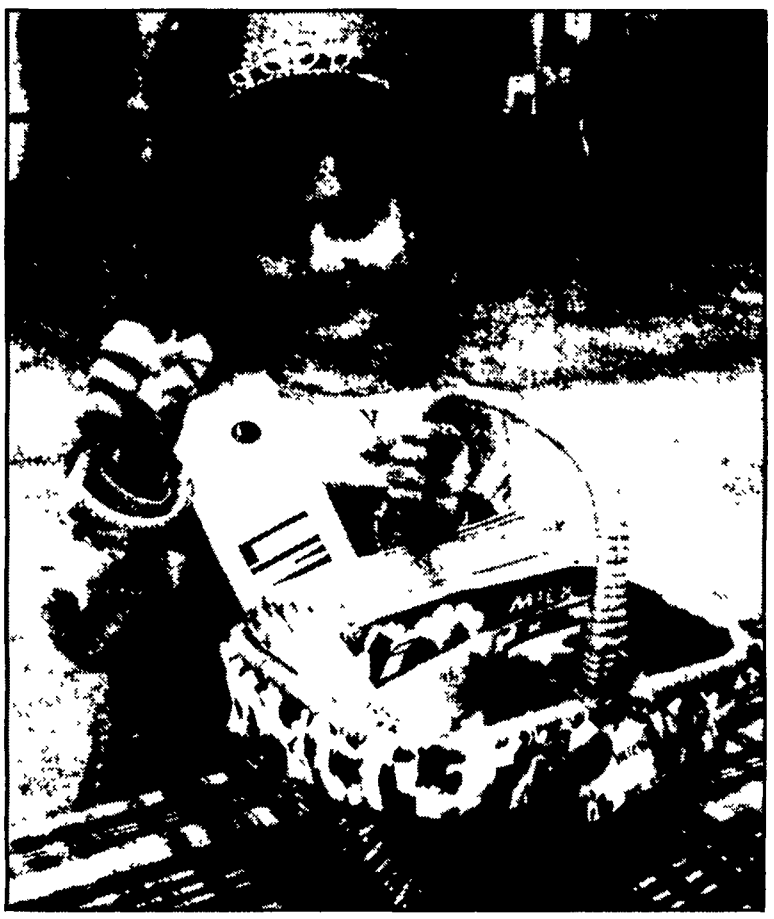
Children Attend Workshops Just Like Grownups



Li'l Miss Dairy Princess Valerie Zuck hands out cow erasers to attendees at the Dairy and Silage Producer Family Day.

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family
Features Editor

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Grownups often attend seminars to learn about the latest research to help them to do a better job at their work.

Children usually stay home, but on Tuesday, they had the opportunity to go with their parents to the Capital Region Dairy and Silage Producer Family Day at the Lebanon Valley Expo Center.

While their parents attended workshops on cow and silage production, the children had their own workshops to attend. With the help of Master Gardeners and extension agents, children learned about nutrition and helped make a snack mix using popcorn, pretzels, peanuts, cereal, and other food. They even got to eat it and take some along home.

Workshops were taught on wildlife: duck, skunk, groundhog, bear, fox, deer and possum.

They colored pictures. They were taught how to plant seeds, and even planted one in a cup to take home to watch it grow.

Checking out this display to see where farm safety is at risk are Arlen Mills, veterinarian, with his children Joseph, 16, Ruth, 13, and Sandra Hall, family living agent.

Shown above and below are sisters Lucinda and Anna Shirk coloring pages and mixing up a healthy snack mix. Activities for children were taught by extension agents and Master Gardeners. Overseeing this activity are Sandra Hall, Lebanon extension agent, and Marcia Weber, York extension agent.

Andrew Krall, 2, with the help of Master Gardener Larry Martz, plants a seed in a container to take home.

Pennsylvania 4-H Members Win National Egg & Poultry Awards

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Pennsylvania youths fared well in egg-judging and poultry knowledge competitions at the recent National 4-H Poultry and Egg Conference in Louisville, Ky.

Maria Sanner of Somerset County won first place in the National 4-H Egg Cookery Presentation Contest, which involved preparing an egg dish and giving an oral presentation on egg quality standards, preparation, versatility and nutritional value. The win was the first for a Pennsylvania 4-H member at a national poultry competition. Somerset County 4-H volunteer leader Theresa Sanner served as chaperone and coach.

A Pennsylvania team also placed seventh in the double-elimination National Avian Bowl Contest. The team included Corry Calderone, Jill McClure and Rebecca Stottlemyer, all from Washington County, and was coached by Washington County 4-H volunteer leaders Jenna Dunmire and Mary Fidler.

The national conference brought together more than 150 senior 4-H members from 25 states for team competitions in poultry and egg judging and in the Avian Bowl poultry knowledge contest. In addition, individuals competed in egg preparation, turkey barbecuing and chicken barbecuing events.

Support for the state delegation at the conference was provided by the PennAg Industries Association Poultry Council. For more information on the conference or the statewide 4-H poultry program, contact senior extension associate Phillip Clauser by phone at (814) 863-8960 or by e-mail at pelauer@psu.edu, or visit the Pennsylvania 4-H poultry web site at http://ulisse.cas.psu.edu/pa4h/contest.html.

ANSWER — Marlene Hurst wanted the book "I Lift My Lamp." Anita Winder writes that when she checked online at ABE Books, several books with the same title but written by different authors were listed. ANSWER — Several people sent in the poem requested by Charles Mason, which was printed in last week's edition of this paper. Thanks to Margaret Sharp, Glenmore, who sent another poem, with no title, about the same subject that she believes Mason would appreciate. Margaret said the poem was given to her family in 1956 when their daughter was born. They read it at her funeral when she passed away in 2000.

"I'll lend you for a little while a child of Mine," He said,
"For you to love the while she lives and mourn for when she's dead.
It may be six or seven years, or 21 or three,
But will you, till I call her back, take care of her for Me?"
She'll bring her charms to gladden you, and shall her stay be brief,
You'll have her lovely memories as solace for your grief.
I cannot promise will stay since all from earth return,
But there are lessons taught down there I want this child to learn.
I've looked the wide world over in my search for teachers true,
And from the throngs that crowd life's lane I have selected you.
Now will you give her all your love, nor think the labor vain,
Nor hate Me when I come to call to take her home again?"
I fancied that I heard you say: "Dear Lord, Thy will be done,
For all the joy Thy child shall bring, the risk of grief we'll run.
We'll shelter her with tenderness, we'll love her while we may
And for the happiness we've known, forever grateful stay!
But shall the angel call to her much sooner than we've planned,
We'll brave the better grief that comes and try to understand.

ANSWER — Madeline Van Leuven, Mantua, N.J., wanted addresses for people or organizations that collect calendars, business cards, and greeting cards. Thanks to Mrs. Daniel Yoder, Lewistown, for supplying these names for those who collect calendars and the fronts of cards: St. Jude's Ranch for Children, 100 St. Jude's, Boulder City, NV 89005.
Send used calendars to Matthew Stephens, R.1, Box 1069, Starruca, PA 18462-9703. The calendars are used for handicapped persons and may have writing on them.

ANSWER — Warrren Glidewell, Bloomsburg, asks if anyone knows of something similar to balsam of myrrh. Thanks to Shirley Orfanella, Quarryville, for writing that myrrh was one of the gifts of the wisemen. In ancient times, essential oils were secreted from shrubs in the burseraceae family and used for embalming fluid, anointing oil, a pain killer, and for use on sores, wounds, coughs, and worm infestation. Myrrh is also a great bug killer. Any plant from the burseraceae family, when cut, will exude a smell similar to turpentine. Today myrrh is used as an incense and in perfume.

ANSWER — Isabel Dietrich, Mifflinsburg, wanted the complete list for the following poem. Thanks to Merrie Stauffer, Myerstown, and an anonymous person for sending poem that includes the following:

January brings the snow,
Makes the feet and fingers glow.
February brings the rain,
Thaws the frozen lakes again.
March brings breezes sharp, loud and shrill,
To stir the dancing daffodil.
April brings the primrose sweet,
Scatters daisies at our feet.
May brings flocks of pretty lambs
Skipping by their fleecy dams.
June brings tulips, lilies, roses,
Fills the children's hands with posies.
Hot July brings cooling showers,
Apricots, and gillyflowers.
August brings the sheaves of corn,
Then the harvest home is borne.
Warm September brings the fruit;
Sportsmen then begin to shoot.
Fresh October brings the pheasant;
Then to gather nuts is pleasant.
Dull November brings the blast;
Then the leaves are whirling fast.
Chill December brings the sleet,
Blazing fire, and Christmas treat.

Post Card Valentines No Longer Considered Dreadful

LOU ANN GOOD
Features Editor

EPHRATA (Lancaster Co.) — Victorian valentines bring to mind elaborate cards made of fine paper and decorated with satin, ribbon, or lace. They often pictured turtledoves, lovers' knots in gold or silver, arrows, cupids, and bleeding hearts. Some cards had elaborate pop-outs, or were known as mechanicals in which part of the card moved when a tab was pulled. Many featured three-dimensional designs.

The post cards shown on this page are from Jimmy De Filippis' collection. He estimates that these post cards are dated between 1890-1920.

For some collectors, another type of antique valentines appeal to them — post card valentine greetings.

The post cards were much more affordable to the working class. In fact, some of the post cards were called "penny dreadfuls." Compared to the fine artistic Victorian styles, these valentine greetings did indeed appear a bit dreadful and sold for only a penny.

Today, the penny dreadfuls and other post card varieties are no longer considered dreadful. They are just what collectors are searching to find.

But the value of the valentine post cards depends on the condition of the card. If in pristine condition, the post cards can sell from a few dollars up to $50 according to Jim De Filippis, New Holland. Especially valued are complete sets by one artist or a series for children or friends.

Filippis said that in addition to valentines being marketed by manufacturers and artists, some were made especially for select stores to hand out to customers or to accompany a box of candy given as a Valentine's gift.

Although the more elaborate cards contained heavy sentimental messages, the post card often carried lighter verse. Sometimes the post cards were intended for a sweetheart, but often the messages were for children or school friends.

When collecting post card valentines look for those in perfect conditiion. If damaged, even slightly, the post cards are practically worthless. Filippis said.

If you have any post card valentines, protect them by storing them in acid-free paper sleeves. Be careful when handling the post cards. The oil from the skin can cause color fading.

Tables Reflected Changing Needs And Fashions

From the 18th century on probably no piece of furiture has changed as much as the table. Its purpose changed from a place to simply eat and drink as did its appearance from utilitarian to spinoffs that held wine, sewing, tea, and and other things. By the 19th century there was a table for dozens of purposes, and in many materials from wood to metal.

In early Colonial times a table was sometimes also a chair. In antique parlance a "chair table." What began as a simple trestle table, basically a long board, resting on trestles was referred to as "table board and frame."

The hutch table, also known as a "chair table," sometimes had a storage compartment under a hinged seat. Another form, was the circular hutch table built on trestle ends. By the early 19th century the chair table was mounted on turned legs.

Another popular Colonial style was the gateleg table. It took on a new form when it became the single-gate or tuckaway table.

A style unique to America was the "butterfly" table. it had a swing bracket instead of a gateleg. It got its' name from the wing-shaped bracket. It came in many shapes and sizes, some with a drawer in the frame.

By the end of the 18th century, the growing American middle class began filling their homes with quality furniture. However, since there homes were modest and the rooms smaller, tables were scaled down to meet their needs. Not for them were smaller versions of old furniture fashions. They wanted a new look. Heavy, old woods such as oak became passe. Popular were mahogany and fruit woods as well as walnut, ebony, and birch.

Comfort dictated new innovations in dining table designs. By the early 19th century either tripod or quadruped pedestals gave diners leg room.

Most of the styles were adapted from English pattern books, such as Chippendale, Sheraton and Hepplewhite. However, these names becamed Americanized from 1788 to around 1825, and lumped under the name Federal style.

The English custom of tea drinking brought about the American version of the small tea table that could be easily moved. One of the earliest styles was the mahogany tripod.

Designed from practicality it had a swivel top. When not used, it was folded up and placed against the wall.

Another small 18th century table was the wine table, with a pierced gallery top. There were also nested tables, the 18th century version of television tray tables.

Originally designed by Thomas Sheraton, they are characterized by slender legs and tops, often with inlays of contrasting woods. In the 19th century they were made in and exported from China in black lacquer. When specially commissioned, they had the owners initials in gilt on the top.

The work table became popular in the late 18th and on into the 19th century. Often they had a decorative fabric skirt underneath. The top lifted up to reveal sewing implements.

Card or game tables developed in the 18th century continued, with changes, into the 19th century.

The late 19th century home had grown in size with an entry hall. A hall table, often with a mirror, filled the need for a place for the calling card tray.

CLUES: All of these table styles have been and continue to be reproduced; some made in Indonesia these days. To get an idea of what is currently being reproduced look at dealer ads selling foreign reproductions. Older reproductions, made in the 1920s as Colonial Revival, are being collected, since the woods and construction are generally quality.

Ask questions of the seller when paying top dollar. Authentic 18th century and early 19th century examples sell for thousands of dollars.

Ultra Series
SnowWolf Heavy Duty Skid Loader Plows

Trip Cutting Edge Design
The SnowWolf Ultra features a trip cutting edge design which allows full down pressure for incredible scraping ability in forward or backdragging situations It eliminates "false tripping" from snow load and will only engage if you actually strike an immovable object

Massive Construction
The SnowWolf Ultra is designed to take abuse from the largest skid loaders At approximately 100 pounds per foot of plowing width, you know the Ultra means business

Food for Thought
Did you know that a modern skid loader with a high speed transmission and a SnowWolf Ultra will outplow a pickup truck under most plowing conditions? A cleaner job, closer to the obstacles (without worrying about your fenders), and more acres plowed in the same amount of time!

The Right Answer.

AGCO hay preservative and applicators take the guesswork out of baling. AGCO hay preservative applicators monitor the moisture level of hay as it is being baled to determine the correct amount of preservative to apply. And, AGCO hay preservative allows you to bale hay with moisture content as high as 30% without the worry of mildew or rot, effectively allowing you to bale fresher hay earlier in the morning and later in the evening. When it comes to quality hay and harvest products, the answer is AGCO.

BETTER BEATS BIGGER.
How do you shatter the world plowing record set by a 425 hp track tractor? You don't have to get bigger. You don't have to get tracks. You just have to get better. That's what happened when the Massey Ferguson 8280 fixed frame wheeled tractor set a new world record. The MF 8280 fine tuned to deliver 387 hp, outdid the predecessor by nearly 100 acres, plowing 621 acres in 24 hours.
What makes the MF 8280 better? Take a world class engine, a transmission that won't quit and add a powerful hydraulic system. Throw in a high tech control system that automatically monitors and adjusts the flow of power to the wheels for less slip and you've got better...more than 24 acres an hour better.
So don't just get a bigger tractor next time you have a big job to do. Get a better tractor. Get a Massey Ferguson 8280 and shatter some records yourself.

LEON - Manure Spreader
"Material Handling Excellence"

"Silver Spreader"® Series

Model SS - 375
Model SS - 425
2 sizes and both in stock at Umbergers

The "Heavy Duty Push Gate" is steel reinforced to prevent twisting or bending under the heaviest loads. Floor and side guides, ensure smooth movement. The push off unloading speed can be adjusted, and the precisely fitting push gate ensures the solid poly box is clean at the end of each load. Notice the standard top gate extension to assist in handling large heaped loads.

Hydraulic Push-Off Technology

Leon "Hydraulic Push-Off Technology" is strong, steady, smooth, simple, trouble free, and reliable to guarantee the power needed to push the heaviest load. This technology eliminates the old fashioned approach to unloading which used apron chains, sprockets, shafts, idler slides, conveyer slats, etc. (developed in the last century) that are the heart of heavy maintenance costs and down time due to failure that are used on competitive machines.

The "Solid Poly Box" on the total floor and total sides is constructed from super slippery corrosion proof polyurethane plastic materials. It is not just a liner or surface coated plywood - but SOLID POLY MATERIAL. It eliminates any distortion when temperatures change and particularly eliminates manure freeze up problems in the winter months. Spreading is faster and easier in all weather conditions. The higher investment in these poly materials more than pays for itself in reducing corrosion, leakage, etc. Problems for the operator in the many years ahead.

Whereas, the FFA promotes premier leadership, personal growth and career success among its members; and

Whereas, Agricultural Education and the FFA ensure a steady supply of young professionals to meet the growing demand in the science, business and technology of agriculture; and

Whereas, the FFA motto – "learning to do, doing to learn, earning to live, living to serve" – gives direction of purpose to these students who take an active role in succeeding in agricultural education; and

Whereas, the FFA promotes citizenship, volunteerism, patriotism and cooperation,

Therefore, I do hereby designate the week of February 15 through 22, 2003, as FFA Week.

ASAE Adopts Position Statement On Biological Engineering Curriculum

ST JOSEPH, Mich.—The American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE) has announced the adoption of a new position statement, "Accreditation of Biologically Based Engineering Curricula." The statement reaffirms ASAE's historical role as a leader in biologically based engineering practice and education.

Because an understanding of biological sciences is intrinsic to the practice of engineering related to food, agricultural, and biological systems, ASAE members have been at the forefront in developing related engineering education, research, and design processes. Indeed, most universities with related degree programs—seventy-five percent of them—underscore the inseparability of biology and agricultural engineering by using the prefix bio in their names: Biological Engineering, Biosystems Engineering, Bioresources Engineering, Bioenvironmental Engineering, etc.

The position statement is issued at a time when new technologies are emerging and the power of biological sciences to meet the needs of a growing world population is just beginning to be exploited. Food, water, and renewable energy are obvious biologically based products and have benefited for more than a century from the endeavors of agricultural and biological engineers. Increasingly, however, biological solutions are being sought in everything from packaging to plant-based pharmaceuticals to bioinstrumentation and beyond. When advancements in areas such as these require an understanding of both biological processes and engineering principles, ASAE and its members will continue to provide the appropriate expertise.

ASAE member Mary Leigh Wolfe, an associate professor at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, helped draft the statement. "With this position paper," said Wolfe, "ASAE is formally stating its intention to use its experience and resources to continue to lead the accreditation process for biologically-based engineering programs. More specifically, ASAE will lead a cooperative effort with other engineering societies and the Accreditation Board for Engand Technology to ensure that appropriate accreditation criteria and processes are in place for biologically based engineering programs."

FFA Celebrates 75 Years Of Student Success

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — From 33 farm boys in 1928 to today's membership of nearly half a million students nationwide, the National FFA Organization has changed significantly in 75 years. Yet the main mission of FFA, student success, has never been stronger.

By delivering an integrated model of education through classroom learning, real-world work experience and activities designed to promote personal growth, FFA and agricultural education help students discover and plan their own unique route to future success.

This year, FFA is celebrating 75 years of making a positive difference in students' lives. During National FFA Week, Feb. 15-22, students from all over the country will be performing acts of community service, presenting programs in their schools and making presentations to government officials and business executives to highlight the accomplishment.

"Our advisors and programs have been ensuring we excel at one mission: student success for 75 years," explains National FFA Advisor Larry D. Case.

Changes in the organization's programs over the years reflect the diversification of the agricultural industry as a whole.

While the majority of FFA activities in 1928 focused on production agriculture, today they also give young people the knowledge needed for more than 300 diverse careers in the food, fiber and natural resources industries. Real-world skills members learn through FFA prepare them for a range of futures in such fields as marketing, law, science, international business, veterinary medicine and golf course management.

The ability of the organization to continue to impact young people through 75 years of change is evident in the number of students who join.

Found in all 50 states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, FFA is currently experiencing a 19-year high in membership. More than 461,000 students ages 12-21 participate in more than 7,000 chapters. Eleven of the nation's 15 largest cities claim FFA chapters.

FFA is not extracurricular. The program completes a three-part model of education. Classroom instruction is applied to hands-on supervised agricultural experience programs (SAEs), which are further strengthened through curriculum-enhancing activities and programs.

Students learn by doing, polishing the characteristics and skills they will need for future success.

For 75 years, thousands of students have benefited from the unique opportunities created through membership in FFA. On Feb. 15-22, 2003, today's members will work to motivate new students to realize their dreams by joining FFA.

One Mission:Student Success
In FFA, student success is earned It's the earning of excellence that makes our students different from all the rest. From starting entrepreneurships, to running for office, to acheiving real-world skills and giving back to the community, our members learn that true success is built from within. For 75 years, FFA and agriculture education have focused on One Mission· Student Success. Discover what the mission can do for a you

The FFA Emblem

The cross section of the ear of corn provides the foundation of the emblem, just as corn has historically served as the foundation crop of American agriculture It is also a symbol of unity, as corn is grown in every state of the nation ,

The rising sun signifies progress and holds a promise that tomorrow will bring a new day glowing with opportunity

The plow signifies labor and tillage of the soil, the backbone of agriculture and the historic foundation of our country's strength

The eagle is a national symbol which serves as a reminder of our freedom and ability to explore new horizons for the future of agriculture

The owl, long recognized for its wisdom, symbolizes the knowledge required to be successful in the industry of agriculture

The words 'Agricultural Education" and "FFA" are emblazoned in the center to signify the combination of learning and leadership necessary for progressive agriculture

Ohio Longhorns Sold Via Website Or Video

BARNESVILLE, Ohio — In 1866, Charles Goodnight would sell whole trail herds of Texas Longhorns while riding through the cattle horseback, at the Cheyenne railhead. Since the earliest times, millions of cattle have sold to private individuals as a one on one deal. In the mid-20th century, livestock auctions started as a local convenient method of bringing a buyer and a product before the auctioneer's gavel. Many other tools of marketing are changing as technology evolves. Today livestock marketing is getting easier, more practical, and less cowpokes are required to handle the herd.

Dickinson Cattle Co., Inc. (DCCI) of Barnesville, Ohio has pioneered registered cattle sales by computer and video technology. The southeastern Ohio ranch in the Appalachian Mountain sells over 600 registered cattle annually as a result of on-line Website or video presentations. Interested buyers log on to www.texaslonghorn.com and select cattle by color pictures, price of inventory, and up to eight generation pedigrees.

More information is provided on the internet than most cattle buyers have seen before. For those who don't have internet access, a standard VHS or DVD 60-minute presentation is their alternative. Decisions can be made by family members in their own home. Although different than an auction, the films can be reversed, played slow motion, paused still or a fast forward mode.

DCCI provides DVD and VHS sale cattle films at no charge unless mailing is required, which is $4. Some buyers call DCCI to consummate purchases and find their cattle selections have been previously sold. That's not a problem because the over 1,000 head of cattle at DCCI will have similar cattle as prompt inventory replacements.

Kirk Dickinson, one of four family member owners of DCCI says, "We look at sales with concern to cost of sales, repeat buyer percentages, reaching large client numbers, and data presented. Most auctions only give a few seconds of information and the gavel is dropped. The maximum information presented to the most people will create sound buying decisions and consistent repeat customers."

DCCI is a major producer of beef type Texas Longhorn cattle. Although DCCI sells cattle every day of the year, and exports to numerous foreign countries, they anticipate a major part of all sales to be one or two cattle per buyer. Over 60 percent of the buyers become repeats within a short time.

Dutch BueLingo cattle are a second breed at DCCI. They distinguish themselves with a totally white band around the midriff area and come in black, red and silver colors.

The ninth semiannual DCCI Longhorn Sale Cattle-Log Film has just been completed. It has 101 cattle filmed and includes reference and semen sires. The Website www.texaslonghorn.com presents over 200 inventory cattle available for sale.

Cost-efficient Centurydrain® roofing and siding is on some of the best looking buildings in the country.

Build with Centurydrain roofing and siding and you've built a money-wise structure. Full-hard, high tensile galvanized steel, and an exclusive drain channel for a dry interior give you a building that'll handle years of hard duty and hard weather. Good looking, too. Crisp lines and plenty of bright, long-lasting colors make Wheeling Centurydrain as handsome as it is economical.

FFA Creed

I believe in the future of agriculture, with a faith born not of words but of deeds - achievements won by the present and past generations of agriculturists; in the promise of better days through better ways, even as the better things we now enjoy have come to us from the struggles of former years.

I believe that to live and work on a good farm, or to be engaged in other agricultural pursuits, is pleasant as well as challenging; for I know the joys and discomforts of agricultural life and hold an inborn fondness for those associations which, even in hours of discouragement, I cannot deny.

I believe in leadership from ourselves and respect from others. I believe in my own ability to work efficiently and think clearly, with such knowledge and skill as I can secure, and in the ability of progressive agriculturists to serve our own and the public interest in producing and marketing the product of our toil.

I believe in less dependence on begging and more power in bargaining; in the life abundant and enough honest wealth to help make it so--for others as well as myself; in less need for charity and more of it when needed; in being happy myself and playing square with those whose happiness depends upon me.

I believe that American agriculture can and will hold true to the best traditions of our national life and that I can exert an influence in my home and community which will stand solid for my part in that inspiring task.

The creed was written by E. M. Tiffany, and adopted at the 3rd National Convention of the FFA. It was revised at the 38th Convention and the 63rd Convention.

FFA at 75
One Mission: Student Success

The "history" of any organization is a complicated, ever-changing body of facts and statistics. For the National FFA Organization, history encompasses defining moments and emotional connections for more than four million Americans who have been members over the course of the past 75 years.

Founded in 1928, the Future Farmers of America brought together students, teachers and agribusiness to solidify support for agricultural education. In Kansas City's Baltimore Hotel, 33 young farm boys charted a course for the future. They could not have foreseen how the organization would grow and thrive.

Since 1928, millions of agriculture students - no one knows exactly how many - have donned the official FFA jacket and championed the FFA creed. FFA has opened its doors and its arms to minorities and women,ensuring that all students could reap the benefits of agricultural education.

In the beginning there were 33. Seventy-five years later there are 457,000. Today, the National FFA Organization remains committed to the individual student, providing a path to achievement in premier leadership, personal growth and career success through agricultural education. Now, the organization is expanding the nation's view of "traditional" agriculture and finding new ways to infuse agriculture into the classroom.

We know the power of 33. We see the power of 457,000. Now we celebrate the power of one. This is our mission; this is our goal.

Mutual Respect Helps Get The Work Done On Teabow Farms

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

WALKERSVILLE, Md. — Milking 785 Holsteins three times a day is no small job.

The first challenge is to find good, reliable workers. Then you have to make sure they stay happy.

At Teabow, Inc. in Frederick County, the working crew is settling into a routine after a major expansion last year that included construction of a new-freestall barn and double-24 parallel parlor.

For owners Jim and Louise Stup and herd managers Larry and Melissa Jarvis, the three Mexican employees hired last fall play a big part in helping the operation run smoothly.

Jose Cerapio Santos, Alberto Rodriguez, and Pedro de la Cruz are on the milking crew for the night shift, from 5 p.m. to 3 a.m. They milk the entire herd once, then milk the first half of the herd again before their shift is over. Friday is their day off.

Pedro de la Cruz takes a break from cleaning out free-stalls. He said he hopes to have longtime employment on Teabow Farms.

Jim Stup, owner of Teabow, Inc., left, and herd manager Larry Jarvis are happy with the quality of the Mexican workers on the dairy.

Santos, Rodriguez, and de la Cruz all hail from the state of San Luis Potosi, about 200 miles north of Mexico City. They have had diverse agricultural experience in the U.S. prior to coming to Teabow Farms. Santos, the oldest of the three, said he worked more than 25 years on dairy farms in Texas and Mexico, but prefers his new job.

"The pay is better here," he said.

The three applied in person for the job last last fall when they heard from some fellow countrymen working on a neighboring dairy farm near Walkersville that Teabow was looking for milkers. They now live together with several other family members on a house near the farm.

Teabow Farms

Larry Jarvis is pleased with the dependability and hard work of Santos, Rodriguez, and de la Cruz. Beside their close attention to milking, they are also meticulous when it comes to cleaning the parlor at the end of their shift.

"These are good guys," Jarvis said. "When the morning shift comes in, the parlor looks like it's brand new."

Jarvis added that he wished some of the other employees would pay that much attention to cleanliness.

The Jarvises recently attended a conference on Managing the Hispanic Workforce put on by Penn State and Cornell Universities. They said it was a valuable experience, not just for learning more about Spanish-speaking workers, but also for managing people in general.

"The most important thing I learned at the conference was to hire people before you need them," said Melissa, who recently signed on three new employees for the dairy.

Jose Cerapio Santos worked on dairy farms in Texas and Mexico prior to coming to Teabow.

One of the topics discussed at the conference was that of promoting Hispanics to supervisory positions on farms. The Jarvises said they are definitely interested in doing that at some point, but admitted they will need to work on their own Spanish language skills first.

Larry Jarvis said that having served eight years in the U.S. Army was a key experience in helping him relate to the Mexican workers.

"You just learn how to deal with people and respect them, no matter what language they speak or where they come from," he said.

Santos, Rodriguez, and de la Cruz still have family members in Mexico and said they would like to be able make an annual trip back home to visit. Jarvis said he is fine with that, but pointed out he doesn't want to lose them permanently.

"I have no problem with them going to Mexico, as long as they come back," he said.

While taking a short break from cleaning out the free-stalls, de la Cruz talked about his satisfaction in being employed at Teabow, Inc. How long does he plan to work there?

"A long time," he said.

Key Performance Indicators at Stotz Dairy

Tom Thompson, Stotz Dairy, Buckeye, Arizona

Stotz Dairy utilizes a Key Performance Indicator (KPI) Program to monitor performance of the dairy. KPI's are measurable factors that have been determined to be critical to the success of the dairy. Daily monitoring of these KPI's helps identify problems early. When desired results are not achieved, an in-depth analysis of the data is performed. Rebalancing rations, modifying protocols, and reeducating employees are performed with the assistance of the herds' nutritionist and veterinarian. While performance improves when measured, the rate of improvement accelerates when measured and reported back. Sponsored by Agway Feed and Nutrition

Northeast Dairy Survival: Processors Require Improvements In Milk Supply

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Dairying isn't what it used to be. And neither are milk prices.

In fact, in the past seven years, the Order 1 blend fell four times below $12 per CWT, then took off, recuperating for a time before the cycle began again. This time, the price has fallen below $12 per CWT and "it's flat," said Rick Smith, Dairylea Cooperative chief executive officer. "That's what makes this cycle so absolutely painful."

Smith spoke in early December last year during the Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders 2002 Annual Conference at the Holiday Inn East in Harrisburg.

Despite all the turmoil and the flat price, producers are doing what they can. But they can do more, because processors are consolidating and require greater supplies of milk.

If the processors can't get milk from Northeast producers, surely they'll get it from the West.

Smith told the few hundred who attended the conference that "we need an attitude and a culture of growth here in the Northeast," he said. "If we are not growing, if we are not moving forward, if we are not showing we are innovative, flexible, and adaptive, this industry will go into a death spiral."

If we are not growing, if we are not moving forward, if we are not showing we are innovative, flexible, and adaptive, this industry will go into a death spiral.

— Rick Smith
CEO, Dairylea

Dairylea has about 2,500 producer-members producing 5.5 billion pounds of milk yearly. Dairylea, based in Syracuse, N.Y., in October conducted its 95th annual cooperative meeting with the theme, "Strength Through Unity."

Said Smith, "For those with the right attitude, there is tremendous opportunity."'

Smith explained the various mergers with

Dairylea and DFA into the Dairy Marketing Services (DMS) group. DMS has two senior partners, including DFA in Kansas City, Mo. and Dairylea, out of Syracuse, N.Y. But 15 smaller local cooperatives are included, comprising Mount Joy, United Ag Services, NFO, and others, in addition to 1,700 independent farms marketing milk.

As an example of change, some of the largest cooperatives have filed for bankruptcy, including Agway and Farmland. And the largest retailer wasn't even in the ballpark 10 years ago — Wal-Mart.

The flat milk prices are hitting everybody equally, from the East to Midwest to the West. Smith noted the period is difficult psychologically, he said. Farmers are beginning to wonder about staying in farming. "Do I even enjoy this?" Smith noted. "Do I want to go through this? It's debilitating, it's debilitating."

Some of the concerns include the milk protein concentrates that could be making an impact on price, an issue that nobody really understands at this point, and perhaps Canadian milk.

A big drop-off in cheese use — especially by the Pizza Hut company, which, two years ago, placed 10 ounces on a pizza pie and now has reduced cheese use to seven ounces per pie — may have contributed to the milk price decline. But larger developments in terms of bigger processors are forcing producers to be more adaptive.

The East has some advantages that make it strong, including the largest fluid prices and the largest cheese- and butter-producing regions in the U.S.

"We already have what the largest areas of the country would like to duplicate," Smith said.

Pennsylvania remains the fourth largest dairy producing state. But the Northeast's market share is eroding, from 18.4 percent in 1990 to 17.2 percent in 2002. To survive, strategies must be devised to promote partnerships and specialization and for a conducive business climate.

At the meeting, Dave Hileman, Hilecrest Farm, noted that Pennsylvania continues to fall below the national average in milk production per cow. "That alone," said Hileman, "should be a wakeup call to those associated with dairy farming."

Northeast Dairy Survival

Hileman, Tyrone, operates a 700-acre farm with 450 milk cows and raises corn, alfalfa, and soybeans. He's a member of Land O'Lakes.

The Hilemans milk three times a day in a double-6 herringbone, milking 22 hours a day. They use a Hispanic workforce.

A heifer grower finishes the calves. The average age to first calving is 22 months.

For processors to invest in the Northeast, processors must first take steps to increase milk production, noted Hileman. Dairy remains at a crossroads in the Northeast and more production is necessary. After all, plants continue to sprout in California, Idaho, New Mexico, and even South Dakota.

The problem is, there isn't enough milk being produced in the ag areas of the Northeast to provide a better source for major processors. Banks are losing their ag expertise and don't know how to keep the dairy infrastructure from crumbling.

"If we do nothing, we will continue to lose the advantages that dairy producers now enjoy," Hileman said. "We must overcome the stagnation of tradition in managing our farms."

The key: find ways to get more milk per cow. Dairies may have to adopt a three-times-a-day milking schedule and other management improvements.

Quinten Frey, president of Turkey Hill Dairy, Conestoga, noted that despite the popularity of their ice cream and milk products, the number one "cash crop," he said for the minute market enterprise is "our iced tea product."

That product was introduced in 1971 and continues to be a mainstay in the minute market stores and supermarkets across the Northeast.

Many ice cream producers are moving to the smaller half-gallon of ice cream, including Edy's brand, from 64 to 56 ounces, noted Frey. That's 13.5 percent less ice cream per package. The reason: shrinking margins at the retail level.

Frey noted that Turkey Hill remains committed to the ice cream market.

Frey noted his grandfather, Amour Frey, founded the company, in 1931, starting home milk delivery door to door in Columbia. (The company has the Turkey Hill Sheep Skin Deed from 1768 to prove there really is a "Turkey Hill.")

From 1931-1954, home delivery was the mainstay. In 1954, the company started making ice cream and sold lots of other snacks and commodities.

In 1967, the store opened its first convenience store along Columbia Avenue, which is still open. Today, Turkey Hill Dairy company operates 235 stores in the region.

The growth of supermarket demand has contributed to the company's overall livelihood. In 1980, Turkey Hill began supermarket sales of ice cream. Supermarket sales of milk also began and, in the 1980s, included stories throughout Pennsylvania.

In 2001, a $25 million expansion doubles capacity for fluid milk product, refrigeration, and storage. Total sales topped $200 million (compared to $20 million in 1980), and products are shipped to 15 states in the Northeast.

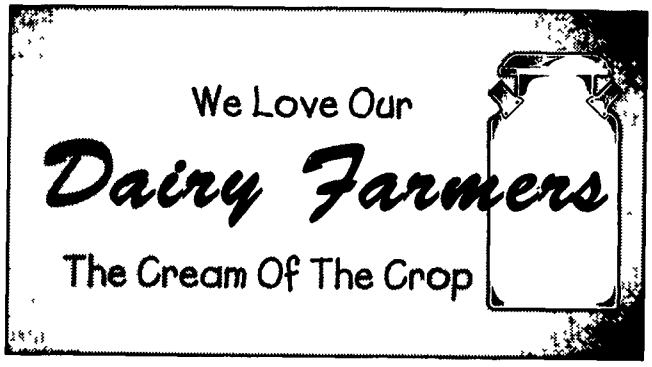
Frey said the company is the Number 6 leading ice cream brand nationwide, and the number one in refrigerated iced tea. They employ more than 540 nonunion associates, generating 100 million quarts of ice cream per year and 115 million milk and iced tea units.

The facility encompasses 207,000 square feet and the company has 27 acres near Conestoga. The plant has its own on-site water and wastewater management.

Milk continues to be a part of a good diet. Flavored milk sales are up 7 percent with more getting to the coveted marketing segment, he noted — children. Flavors include chocolate, mocha, strawberry, and vanilla.

Milk products are slowly replacing the soda dispensers in schools.

According to studies, milk is the "third most popular reason to go to a convenience store," Frey said.



Labor, Expansion At Forefront Of Dairy Ag Issues

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

MOUNT JOY (Lancaster Co.) — Hiring, training, and working with a migrant workforce is "not as scary as it seems up front," noted Mike Brubaker, co-owner of Brubaker Farms in Mount Joy.

Brubaker, who spoke on a dairy expansion panel in November last year, employs four Hispanic workers on his 600-cow dairy. In fact, he said, "we're real pleased with them."

Brubaker, who employs 10 full-time, spoke with two other farmers about his experiences with expanding the dairy herd and meeting several challenges in November during an Ag Issues Forum, "We Want You To Succeed: A Professional Dairy Seminar," at Acorn Farms/Wizard Catering in Mount Joy.

About 75 producers and dairy agri-industry representatives attended the event.

Mike Brubaker farms in partnership with his brother, Tony.

The challenge, according to Mike, was to meet the needs of the workers and match the job descriptions and salary accordingly.

Labor, Expansion

Though the Hispanic population is a different culture than dairy producers can be used to, the workers are flexible enough to labor weekends and are scheduled time off sometimes during the regular workweek.

The language challenge proved interesting for the Brubakers. "My brother Tony took German and I learned Latin in high school," said Brubaker. "We had no background in Spanish."

To manage the large herd, bit by bit the Brubakers learned how to communicate. They also took a 13-week crash course in learning the language and culture from Penn State. Through the course, the dairymen learned basic language skills.

"With our broken Spanish and the Spanish guy's broken English, we got through," noted Brubaker. "It's not as much an obstacle as you might think."

He noted that he learned a lot from the dedicated workers.

Dan Hershberger and wife Gayle own Milky Sprigs Farm in Quarryville. The Hershbergers manage five full-time employees and two part-time.

Dan noted the farm also uses an Hispanic workforce and uses flexible scheduling.

Dave Zimmerman, who farms Meadow View Farms in Reinholds, along with wife Joyce and two sons, also uses hired workers, including school kids. The school kids milk three times per week. Five full-time workers are also employed.

Both Dan Hershberger and Mike Brubaker do not calculate man-hours in terms of milk production, but pounds of milk per worker. The benchmark is about one million pounds per employee.

Dave Zimmerman uses a milk crew to milk the 600-some cows at 7 a.m. The school kids are employed for the 4 p.m. milking time.

One full-time person enjoys managing herd health and enjoys "putting in long days," he said.

The Hershbergers milk about 300 cows. At one point, before expansion, they were looking at an outdated freestall setup. "We asked ourselves, 'what are we doing this for?' We thought we should do it right or get out of (dairying)."

Hershberger noted the importance of looking for the right vendor for facility and herd expansion. "They want you to succeed, too," said Dan. If he were to do it all over again, Hershberger would fill the new barns "with all heifers, instead of a new herd of cows."

Labor, Expansion

He said, "Fill the barn with good quality heifers and keep it full."

Zimmerman noted that they were looking at an old stantion barn. The old operation was a 40-cow stall barn with 80 cows milking. "This was very time-consuming and very tiring on the knees," he said. "We were looking to switch."

The Zimmermans looked at feasibility studies. The first study looked at a 300-cow operation, but with those numbers, "it looked like we would be better off if we had no expansion at all," he said, to accommodate the working families. So they opted for 60 cows.

His daughter left a landscape nursery operation to run the milking parlor. His son James received an automotive inspection certificate from Harrisburg Area Community College but returned to the farm.

James is in charge of feeding and maintenance and has "never milked a cow yet," said Zimmerman. "Everybody has their own section, and knows how to do their job."

David noted how important it was to do an expansion study and plan it out before you start. "Take a video camera along," he said, "to look at expansion." The video camera looked at lighting and other things. "The little things in an expansion make a big difference," he said.

The 600-head dairy utilized half cows and heifers. The heifers were already purchased from a heifer-raiser before expansion.

Zimmerman noted that the holding areas for the cows are only half slatted. "We should have put full slats in," he said. "That's one of the things we should have done differently."

Mike Brubaker, who expanded the dairy operation about 10 years ago, was milking 100 cows each on two farms. Each location had 42 tiestalls. There was a lack of cow comfort, two sets of labor, feed storage, and milking equipment to manage, and other issues.

Both Tony and Mike, out of college, enjoyed the farm life and dairying. But several issues were critical to them if they expanded: cow comfort, labor, and improved production. With three-times-a-day milking, feed storage and equipment access were critical.

"We're glad we expanded," he said, noting that managing the labor and other issues "allowed us more quality time."

The best thing they accomplished: figuring out

Small Business First Loan Program

Lynn Kime
Agricultural Economic Development Agent
Adams County

Senate Bill 1045 was signed into law in October 2002. This law provides agricultural producers with a new and alternative funding source for their operations. The law amends the existing Small Business First Loan Program to include agricultural production. Several area producers were instrumental in the development and promotion of this legislation and they are to be commended along with Area Loan Organization for their work on the proposal.

The law includes almost all forms of agricultural production with less than one hundred employees, and eliminates the previous requirement of job creation included in the previously existing regulations.

To qualify for funding under the Small Business First lending program, the operation must be at least ten contiguous acres or, if not, produce at least $10,000 income per year. Acquisition of land, buildings, machinery, and equipment may be financed through this program. Mobile equipment not titled or registered for highway use may also be purchased with these funds. Working capital is also available through the program.

The term of loan depends on the use of the funds. The terms are as follows: real estate—10 years; machinary and equipment—seven years, and working capital—three years. The interest rate for this lending program is 3.75 percent and all loans must have matching funding. The program allows borrowings for 50 percent of total eligible project costs up to a maximum of $200,000. Working capital may be borrowed up to $100,000.

There are fees associated with the loans that may be included in the loan package. The fee structure is graduated by the size of the loan, and is assessed by the Area Loan Organization. Lisa Herrick from the Adams County Economic Development Corporation advises that this program not be used for loan amounts less than $40,000 to receive full benefit of the program. Smaller loans are available but may not be economically feasible.

The program is administered through the Area Loan Organizations across Pennsylvania. For more details and information about this program, please contact your local Area Loan Organizations. Listed below is contact information for dairymen across the Capital Region.

Labor, Expansion

different cash flow scenarios coupled with milk prices and production levels. The "bells and whistles" were thrown out of the expansion project without sacrificing critical cow comfort. "We kept the debt/cow ratio to a serviceable level," he said.

At the time the facility was built, the methods were state-of-the-art. That's changed in the decade since. The important step: get a "better site layout initially," said Brubaker. Take into consideration manure and feed storage and "how it all comes together."

Look at manure and cow flow, proper ventilation, and milking hours. A manure pit should be adequate storage for five months. And provide options to expand the operation in the future.

One area the farm remained "tight," noted Brubaker, was the milk tank purchase. To save costs, they purchased used milk tanks. "But we should have spent the money," said Brubaker.

Also at the event, Dr. Joe Harner, Kansas State University, spoke about the importance of site planning. He noted that when planning for 600 cows, have the room to determine where the next 600 will be going, he said. Make room in planning so that, down the road, you'll know what to do. Plan to "double what your initial goals are," he said.

Odor control (use of methane digesters) and looking keenly at what manure management strategies are needed are essential.

Producers should understand that "nutrient management starts at the feed bunk," said Harner. Phosphorous feed management has to be taken into consideration, with a look at balancing diets the correct way.

Dairy Farms And Phosphorus Regulations Workshop Set

CHAMBERSBURG (Franklin Co.)—Penn State Dairy Alliance and PEACCE will conduct a Dairy-PR workshop in Franklin County on Feb. 26. In this instance, PR does not stand for public relations, but rather phosphorus regulations. The objective of this program is to answer a very simple question: "What do I need to know about phosphorus?"

The answers to this question will encompass issues related to the environment, regulations, financial assistance, dairy cattle nutrition, and agronomy. The target audience is anyone who wants to receive more information about how phosphorus regulations will impact their business and the options available to deal with the regulations being enforced. This includes the feed industry, veterinarians, producers, agronomists, and conservation specialists. The program is meant to supply very practical and applied information about phosphorus and regulations.

PEACCE, or Pennsylvania Environmental Agricultural Conservation Certification of Excellence, is a proactive program promoting environmentally safe agricultural practices among livestock producers. The morning program will begin with Robb Meinen, head of the PEACCE program. He will cover environmental awareness, manure and nutrient application, odor, gaseous emissions, and nuisance issues.

Alyssa Dodd, Penn State specialist in agricultural environmental policy, will cover the main regulatory issues that are the most important to dairy operations. She will also provide information related to the new CAFO regulations.

Roy Richardson from the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture will discuss the financial assistance available to producers.

In the afternoon, Jennifer Weld from USDA-ARS and Virginia Ishler will work through an example herd demonstrating the impact phosphorus nutrition has on the phosphorus index.

The program is scheduled from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at the Lighthouse Restaurant, Chambersburg. The registration fee is $10 per person. Make checks payable to Penn State. More information on the program can be obtained by contacting Virginia Ishler at (814) 863-3912 or by e-mailing vishler@psu.edu.

Pre-registration by Feb. 21 is recommended. Mail checks to: Virginia Ishler, 324 Henning Building, University Park, PA 16802.

Directions: Take I-81 to Scotland, Exit 20. Take Rt. 997 north three miles to U.S. 11, then south on Rt. 11 about one mile to Lighthouse Restaurant on right.

DairyOne Conducts Recordkeeping Workshops

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

BLUE BALL (Lancaster Co.) — Herd reports from DairyOne don't look the same as the ones dairy farmers used to receive from Pennsylvania DHIA.

That's one of the changes brought about by last year's merger of the two organizations.

To help explain the new system and answer questions, DairyOne representative George Cudoc is conducting workshops in various locations throughout the state. One of these sessions took place this week at Shady Maple Restaurant in Blue Ball. About 70 producers attended.

Cow data for DairyOne members is now processed at Dairy Records Management Systems in Raleigh, N.C. instead of the facility in State College, where the reports used to be generated.

"You have some new opportunities that you're not aware of at this time," Cudoc told the group.

"There are very few people who have the time to make the most of the records program they use on their farm," he said. Focusing on a few key tools, however, can have a positive effect on profitability.

Herd summary reports are the "largest single change" in the new record system, according to Cudoc.

The key to keeping records that help farmers make good management decisions is to make sure that all pertinent information is entered.

For example, one goal is to reduce the size of the "breeding herd." However, if a manager decides not to breed a cow because he or she plans to cull it at the end of the lactation, and the cow is included in the data as one of the breeding herd, the report will give an inaccurate figure for the size of the breeding herd.

Managers should let their DairyOne technicians know all of this type of information so that reports reflect the herd as accurately as possible.

The "stage of lactation profile" for individual cow production is one of the most useful tools for detecting problems in the herd, Cudoc said.

The "stage of lactation profile" breaks each cow's lactation down into periods. If a cow's production is not peaking in the 41-100 day period, Cudoc said, that's a sign something is wrong.

This tool can also be used to detect other signs of trouble, such as abnormal component levels.

Family And Business: An Uneasy Combination?

Richard Stup
Human Resource Specialist
Penn State Dairy Alliance

The term "family business" is usually associated with positive thoughts and meaning. But as anyone with experience working with family businesses knows, there can be times when the "family" part interferes with the "business" part. Even worse, there are times when the "business" part can damage the relationships in the "family" part beyond repair. Clear, open, and honest communication is the first key to avoiding both of these problems and creating conditions for the family business to thrive. Business and human resource planning are activities that will help the business continue to meet the needs of the family.

Let's consider the family first. The family exists as a social institution in order to provide a loving and nurturing environment for people to live and grow. Family members fill their roles naturally; managers do not select them. A family unit is characterized by words such as growth, nurturing, love, and relationships.

Now consider a business. Fundamentally, a business exists for the purpose of generating profits that will financially support ownership and employees. Businesses achieve this by taking resources such as labor, capital, and raw materials and using them to produce something that can be sold at a profit. Business is characterized by words such as management, profits, control, performance, and compensation. Businesses must have people (both management and labor) possessing interests, skills, and abilities that meet the needs of the business.

The meeting also included award presentations to top Chester and Lancaster County producers.

Gideon Stoltzus Jr. of Honeybrook had the top DairyOne herd for protein in Chester County in 2002. His herd averaged 884 pounds of protein.

David Lair of Oxford was honored for having lowest somatic cell count herd for Chester County, with an SCC of 100,000.

Lester Newswanger received the award for production in Lancaster County, with a rolling herd average of 28,925 pounds of milk, 1,032 of butterfat, and 856 of protein. Tom and Dale Smith of Denver had the top-producing Brown Swiss herd, at 16,580 pounds of milk.

Family and Business

When members of the family act out their family roles in the context of the business, problems can develop. Parents with older children involved in their business may find it difficult to switch to the role of business associate. Siblings may carry on rivalries from childhood into their adult roles as business partners. In such cases, the business will suffer because family priorities and problems will not lead to good decision-making in the business context.

More damaging are cases where business issues are carried over into the life of the family. A financially struggling family business may lead to feelings of blame and disappointment between parents and children or siblings. When the success of a business is tied up with the heritage and tradition of a family, the decline of the business can lead to the destruction of the family as well. In such cases, the family business ceases to meet the needs of the family.

1. Open lines of communication. Problems in a family can often be difficult to discuss. Family members that are in business together need to make a special effort to communicate because their livelihood depends on it. Issues such as performance expectations should be clearly defined and understood so that conflict can be avoided. In addition, family members need to communicate openly about long-term personal career goals and expectations.

2. Conduct business planning. Business planning is a formal process where partners strategically plan for the organizations long-term development. In the business planning process, partners consider issues such as the current and expected market environment, past performance, and existing strengths and weaknesses of the business. They combine this information with their expectations, the advice of consultants, and their shared values to come up with plans to meet the future.

3. Formalize human resource planning. When family businesses make do with the people in the family as the sole source of management and labor, there is often little thought put into aligning human resources with the needs of the business; or, conversely, to aligning the business enterprise with the interests and skills of the people. The result is often people involved in aspects of the business that they are not qualified to handle and do not particularly care for. The solution is to carefully analyze each function of the business and the skills that management and labor need to effectively operate. If the family doesn't have someone with the skills

Odor Management Is An Increasing Concern

Virginia Ishler, Penn State Dairy Alliance and Gabriella Varga
Penn State Distinguished Professor

Water quality has been the main focus of environmental regulations with phosphorus gaining most of the attention. Air quality issues are next in line in the regulatory process. Therefore nitrogen is as important as phosphorus, and maybe even more so, because water and air quality issues are strongly influenced by this element. Odor problems are moving to the forefront of public concerns. It is highly probable that odor management plans will be required in the future similar to how nutrient management plans are already in place.

The efficiency of nitrogen utilization is typically low in dairy cows. For example, dairy cattle on average secrete between 25 to 35 percent of the nitrogen consumed into milk and the majority of the remaining nitrogen is excreted in manure as ammonia and organic nitrogen. Some reasons why nitrogen efficiency tend to be low in dairy cattle are because of the practice of feeding protein in excess of requirements, improper balance of the protein fractions, and protein sources of insufficient quality and potentially limiting amino acids. Reducing dietary protein in the ration has been successfully achieved without reducing animal performance and can increase nitrogen utilization.

Urea, which is a major end product of nitrogen metabolism, is mostly excreted in urine with some diffusion into milk. In manure, the conversion of urea to ammonia is influenced by urease activity, pH and temperature. Ammonia emissions can be the cause of acid rain, odor nuisances, and it can react in the atmosphere with other trace gases eventually affecting particulate matter. From a nutritionist point of view, understanding how nitrogen impacts the environment and the probability of producers facing air quality regulations should be an incentive for improving protein nutrition on the farm.

Ammonia emitted into the air can contribute to the formation of acid rain. This is an environmental concern because of its impact on the ecosystem. Changes in pH can affect the biodiversity of fish, plant and other organisms living in an aquatic environment. As lakes and streams become more acidic, the numbers and types of aquatic life can decrease. Atmospheric nitrogen depositions on or near water sources can be significant. So not only can nitrogen leach into groundwater, but it can affect surface water by atmospheric deposition.

There is a great deal of information related to odor, but the methodology to quantify odor with specific elements and its effect on human health is lacking. Not only is there the actual odor, but there is an individual's perception of smell. Certain smells can overlap with emotions. For example, an unpleasant odor can affect a person's mood. Odor may prompt an unpleasant memory. There may be a preconceived perception about the type of facility from which the odor is emanating.

Every person has a different threshold as to what they consider an offensive smell. Another unknown is the association between odor and health. There have been reports of people experiencing nausea and depression due to odors emanating from swine facilities.

The other issue, which is more tangible, is how odor impacts the quality of life and property value. There are several practices that producers can follow to promote a positive environment.

Since the general public tend to associate a visual picture with odor, maintaining a clean, neat, aesthetically pleasing facility would go a long way to improving a person's perception. Injecting or incorporating manure shortly after application, early in the day if possible, would minimize odors. Farms near residential areas should avoid manure application on holidays and the weekend. Communicating with neighbors can go a long way in fostering better relations and minimizing complaints.

Family and Business

and interests required, then a remedy must be found. Potential remedies include: hiring someone outside the family with the needed skills, seeking training for a family member, or eliminating that aspect of the business.

Family businesses have the powerful advantage of dedication and motivation from family members. This advantage can help a family business to overcome adversity that might destroy a non-family enterprise. In addition, a well-run family business can be part of an extremely positive environment in which to raise a family. In order to harness these advantages and meet the long-term needs of a family and a business, effective communication and planning must be part of the equation.

Penn State Dairy Professor Honored With International Award

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.)—John Almquist, professor emeritus of dairy physiology in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences, recently received an honorary lifetime membership to the Association of Applied Animal Andrology in Hungary for his contributions to the field of applied animal andrology.

This is the first time this honor was extended. Two other individuals also were recognized. The Association for Applied Animal Andrology is an international scientific society with the primary objective of stimulating and disseminating information on applied animal andrology, which is the multidisciplinary study of male reproductive systems.

Almquist is known internationally for his work in artificial insemination and reproductive physiology of cattle. He has authored more than 165 research papers in scientific and professional journals and proceedings, with much of his early work dealing with semen preservation and extending the usefulness of genetically superior sires through artificial insemination.

Almquist was the first to demonstrate the value of adding penicillin and streptomycin to diluted bull semen to control bacterial growth and increase fertility. He also pioneered the use of mild-base extenders to prolong the fertile life of bull spermatozoa. Later, he added glycerol to milk to develop an improved liquid diluent, which permitted semen to retain high fertility over long periods.

Another aspect of his research showed that behavioral preparation of bulls significantly increased the number of sperm that can be harvested for use in artificial insemination. Many techniques Almquist developed for cattle have been applied to other species, including humans.

Almquist, who served on Penn State's dairy and animal science faculty from 1944 until 1982, established Penn State's Dairy Breeding Research Center. In 1999, this center was rededicated as the John O. Almquist Research Center.

He shared the 1981 Wolf Prize in agriculture—an award referred to as the agricultural equivalent of the Nobel Prize—for his work in artificial insemination for livestock improvement. His many other awards include the National Association of Animal Breeders Research Award, the 1998 Penn State Distinguished Alumnus Award, the 1998 National Award for Agricultural Excellence from the National Agri-Marketing Association and the 1999 Pioneer Award from the National Dairy Shrine.

John Almquist is a pioneer in the field of artificial insemination for cattle.

Odor Management

Consider odor management when planning a herd expansion and examining options for new facilities. Site selection can be a critical factor in relation to prevailing wind and residential areas. Work with engineers to evaluate options to reduce manure surface area exposed, dust control, capture and treatment of gas emissions, dilution of emissions, or manure treatment. Keeping odor in mind when making plans may save a lot of aggravation and grief in the future.

Breed-Back FP Now Approved for BVD

Dairy PLUS Business News

ST. JOSEPH, Mo.—Boehringer Ingelheim Vetemedica, Inc. (BIVI), has received USDA approval for a new, modified live virus vaccine, Breed-Back FP, a vaccine specifically developed to aid in the prevention of persistently infected (PI) calves caused by bovine viral diarrhea (BVD) types 1 and 2.

Incorporate Breed-Back FP into existing heifer and cow vaccination schedules to help protect unborn calves during gestation and herds from the long term impact of PI calves. Breed-Back FP is administered subcutaneously and meets Beef Quality Assurance guidelines. It is available in four antigen combinations to fit individual management protocols. These are: Breed-Back FP 5, Breed-Back FP 5-HS, Breed-Back FP 10, and Breed-Back FP 10-HS.

According to Kansas State University, 70 to 90 percent of the world's cattle population is seropositive for BVD Types 1 and 2. PI calves are born to heifers and cows exposed to a BVD challenge generally during the first 30 to 120 days of gestation. This challenge can result in the BVD virus crossing the placenta and infecting the fetus.

If the fetus is not aborted or stillborn, a calf is born carrying the BVD virus. This calf's immune system is immunotolerant to the BVD virus.

The resulting BVD-infected calf continually sheds significant amounts of virus to the entire herd according to Carol Rinehart, Ph.D., manager of bovine biological research and development at BIVI. PI calves can be poor doers and highly susceptible to other calfhood diseases or they can be healthy looking and go undetected in the herd. Death rates for a PI calf are greater than 50 percent in the first 12 months of life.

Breed-Back FP can be administered to non-pregnant cattle a minimum of four weeks before artificial insemination or being placed with bulls.

John Gatley, Leidy's, Inc.; Logan Bower, Perry County dairy producer; and Jorge Estrada of Leadership Coaching International, Inc. share ideas on promoting Hispanic workers to management positions.

Relating To Hispanic Workers Is 'Basic'

Workforce Management Conference Draws Diverse Crowd

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

GRANTVILLE (Dauphin Co.) — "Si se puede."

In Spanish, the phrase means "Yes you can."

For Angelo Mino, "Si se puede" is an attitude that can be applied in any situation, especially where people of different cultures work side by side.

Mino is a native of Ecuador whose first job in the U.S. involved working for $4.25 an hour as a parking lot security guard. He is now the head of Summit, a Kansas firm that connects Hispanic workers with U.S. employers. Mino was one of several speakers at a "Managing the Hispanic Workforce" conference recently offered to dairy and other ag managers by Penn State and Cornell Universities. About 100 people attended.

"It's so basic," Mino said of the lessons to be learned about bringing Hispanic employees into a farm operation. "A third-grader could teach this."

Mino outlined four key areas in which an employer can generate loyalty and respect from Spanish-speaking employees. First and foremost is the role of the family in Hispanic life. That is not such a strange concept to dairy producers.

"For us, family is a really, really strong thing," Mino said. "But so is it to farmers."

Ways that farm managers can create employee loyalty include welcoming their kids, celebrating birthdays, inviting family members to work, and offering rewards that bolster family unity — such as calling cards or help with immigration and naturalization hassles.

Managers should welcome and embrace the workers along with their families, Mino said. In doing so, bosses also become members of workers' extended family — or what one farm manager referred to as a network of seemingly "unlimited relatives."

"In my previous barn, I scraped two times a day; and I was tired of it, not to mention the danger to the cows if a cable snapped. I thought I would not be able to justify the additional cost until my builder suggested a design change which brought the cost down relatively close to the original design. The biggest benefit to me is the labor savings. Two people can handle all the chores for our herd. I save money not only on labor but also on repairs.

The cows' hooves are healthier, and they show heat better because they are not afraid of slipping. During the five years with slats, I have not lost a single heifer from slipping. The cows stay much cleaner, even with my misting system for cooling them. The water has a place to escape."

- Raymond Good
Good's Dairy Farm

"We would use slats again if doing it all over!"

"Our original plan was to install scrapers. But after 10 minutes in a slatted barn in Somerset County, we changed our minds. Some people stay away from slats because of the initial cost, but that extra cost is made up for in the first couple years.

The one thing I like the most about slats is that there is no expense. I don't have any scrapers or drive units to maintain. I don't have to run scrapers every day or haul manure like we did in our previous tie stall barn. The cows' foot health has been a lot better, and the cows stay much cleaner. Our milk production is up and the somatic cell count has gone down. I give at least some of the credit to the slats because with less moisture on the floor, there is less bacteria."

- David Wolfskill

Thank you and Congratulations to all Dairy farmers that have installed slatted floors.

Hispanic Workers

"I want you to create a small place on your farms for us," Mino said. "If you are my friend, you are my family now."

Mino also pointed out that Hispanics usually feel strong ties to their home countries, and that managers should recognize and respect this by taking an interest in their food and culture and by helping them stay updated on waht's happening at home.

"Don't take away the only things I bring with me — my traditions and my pride," Mino said.

The same principles apply to the religious beliefs which many Hispanics hold dear.

"Talk with (your employees.) Find out what things are important to them."

Managers who are sensitive to employees' beliefs will discover that one or two days in the year are considered too sacred for many Hispanics to be comfortable working. One of them is Good Friday.

Mino advised against giving or loaning money to workers.

"Give recognition without money," he said. Bosses can give better support by encouraging them set up bank accounts so they can wire money more inexpensively to family members, and by helping them with the legalization process. By assisting in these ways, employers can help Hispanic workers save "thousands of dollars," Mino said.

The two-day conference also featured Jorge Estrada of Leadership Coaching International, Inc. speaking on developing supervisors from within; Tom Maloney of Cornell on cultural dimensions; Richard Stup, Penn State Dairy Alliance, on expanding employee skills, Vinton Smith of Penn State on overcoming the language barrier, Dave Grusenmeyer of Cornell's PRO-DAIRY on gaining multicultural acceptance in the community, and two attorney who spoke on legal issues surrounding immigrant workers.

A panel made up of John Gatley, Leidy's Inc., a pork processing company from Souderton; Logan Bower, dairy farmer from Blain, Perry County; and Jorge Estrada handled questions on promoting Hispanic workers to supervisory positions.

Participants generally agreed that grooming Spanish-speaking workers for management positions has its challenges and can be a slow process, but is becoming an increasing necessity in order for farm operations to survive and thrive.

As an example of the employment trend on dairy farms, Estrada noted that the number of Hispanic workers on Franklin County dairies increased from a total of three or four in the early 1990s to more than 60 today.

"Coaching and grooming is needed across all of your businesses," Estrada said. "It takes time and it takes a plan."

Estrada said the increase in dairy herd sizes and number of employees on farms requires a "paradigm shift" from "managing cows to managing people."

Your Dairy And The New CAFO Regulations

Alyssa Dodd, Penn State Extension Associate
Robert E. Graves, Agricultural, Biological, and Engineering Extension

In mid-December 2002, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) released its court mandated revisions to the Concentrated Animal Feeding Operation (CAFO) rule. These are the first major changes to the CAFO regulations since the Federal Clean Water Act was passed in the 1970's. The rules include changes to the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) permitting regulations and technology requirements. EPA estimates the new rules apply to approximately 15,500 livestock operations (dairy, swine, chicken, turkey, beef, veal, horse, sheep, duck) across the country. Nationwide, approximately 3,500 mature dairy and 250 heifer-raising operations are affected.

Similar to the existing CAFO program, any Animal Feeding Operation (AFO) that meets certain criteria will be classified as a CAFO. A mature dairy cow or heifer-raising operation is an AFO if animals are confined for at least 45 days in a 12-month period and there's no grass or other vegetation in the confinement area during the normal growing season. EPA is continuing to focus on large CAFOs (approximately 700-plus mature dairy cows or 1,000-plus heifers) and medium CAFOs (approximately 200-plus mature cows or 300-plus heifers). Permitting authorities also retain the power to designate any size AFO a CAFO if the operation significantly contributes to water quality impairment.

The Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) is responsible for enforcing CAFO regulations in Pennsylvania. DEP will be working with EPA to determine what changes will be made to the existing Pennsylvania CAFO regulations to comply with the new federal rules. The new rules will affect existing permitted CAFOs once the permit expires a new permit is applied for and issued. CAFOs applying for a permit for the first time should contact DEP for more information.

Pennsylvania will likely have approximately one year to revise the state CAFO permitting program, bringing it into compliance with the new federal regulations. EPA expects all CAFOs to meet the new federal requirements by year 2006.

CAFO Regulations

The minimum federal requirements for all dairy cow or heifer-raising CAFOs are similar to Pennsylvania's current CAFO requirements. All CAFOs are required to develop and implement a nutrient management plan, keep records, and submit reports to the permitting authority. The specific requirements of a CAFO permit will depend on the category of the operation: Large, Medium, or Designated CAFO. The DEP has the authority to set additional requirements for any size CAFO. Therefore, it will be important for the dairy industry to keep abreast of how DEP interprets the EPA regulations into PA regulations.

Pennsylvania dairy farms must take appropriate steps to protect the environment. Sufficient time and resources must be allocated for this purpose.

Electrical Wiring On Dairy Farms

Robert E. Graves
Agricultural, Biological, and Engineering Extension

LaVerne Stetson, an expert in farm wiring and the National Electric Code (NEC) recently spent several days visiting Pennsylvania dairy farms and reviewing wiring methods and condition. This was part of a Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture sponsored project investigating stray voltage problems and mediation on dairy farms.

Proper wiring methods are important both for safety reasons (fire and electrocution of people or animals) and to minimize on farm sources of stray voltage. Farm wiring is neither residential nor light commercial and is recognized in the NEC as having unique requirements. Particular characteristics include moist or dusty environments, wide variations in temperature, presence of corrosive materials including manures, gases, and cleaning agents, and vulnerability to physical damage from animals and equipment. Most buildings and areas on a dairy farm will require wiring methods and devices that are corrosion resistant, watertight and dust tight. Modern plastic materials are ideal for most of these conditions.

General observations on dairy farms reveal the following:

•Wiring on many farms has deteriorated, is poorly maintained, and represents a real threat to life safety, and fire.

•Many new installations are still being made with ordinary galvanized boxes, loose fitting covers and NM (household grade) wire.

Some general recommendations to follow include:

•High quality plastic (PV) boxes, covers and conduit, UF type cable and water tight box connectors selected and installed to be water and dust tight are a must for milking centers, animal barns and feed storage areas.

•Do not run cable inside wall cavities or attic spaces where undetected rodent damage can occur. Protect surface mounted cable from physical damage by animals or equipment.

•Light fixtures should have gasketed covers to protect the light bulbs and interior wiring, ballasts, etc. from moisture and dust.

Common wiring problems that can lead to stray

Electrical Wiring

voltage problems include:

•Improper procedures and equipment that result in interconnection of the grounding system (green or bare wire) and the neutral (white wire) supply system. This often happens in sub panels found in utility rooms and feed centers.

•Excessive voltage drop from long service drops or feeder runs to sub panels.

•Poor connections, including over or under tightening of compression lugs, failure to use corrosion inhibitor on connections, and old loose pole top splices.

Electrical systems require proper design installation and maintenance. A regular preventative maintenance routine is important to assure that your electrical system is performing in a safe and effective manner. The National Food and Energy Council provides specific information on farmstead wiring. Their website is www.nfec.org.

April Conference To Examine Stray Voltage On Dairy Farms

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.)—More than 20 researchers, educators, consultants, and investigators will share their knowledge and answer your questions at Stray Voltage and Dairy Farms: A Conference for Farm Advisors, Educators, Utilities, and Public Policy Advisors. The conference will discuss the impact, sources, measurement, prevention, and mitigation of stray voltage on dairy and other livestock farms. It will take place April 9-11, in Camp Hill.

Stray voltage is defined by the USDA as "a difference in voltage between two surfaces that may be contacted simultaneously by an animal." When this occurs, the cow acts to complete the circuit and experiences a small shock or "tingle." Research shows that stray voltage may increase cow stress and health problems. Sometimes, however, problems attributed to stray voltage are in fact caused by something else, and a multidisciplinary team is needed to identify the actual problem.

The conference will begin with an overview of electricity and wiring fundamentals to ensure that everyone has the background necessary to understand subsequent, more technical presentations. The program will allow ample time for questions and discussion. It is sure to be a unique educational opportunity for many, including veterinarians, dairy scientists, extension educators, engineers, builders, rural electric contractors, agribusiness, utilities, public policy advisors, and milk cooperatives.

Specific objectives of the conference are to:

- provide an overview of the fundamentals of electricity, power distribution, and farm and home wiring systems,
- present research accomplished since the 1991 publication Effects of Electrical Voltage/Current on Farm Animals: How to Detect and Remedy Problems, the most current USDA handbook on the topic,
- discuss on-farm and off-farm sources of stray voltage, the National Electric Code, measurement of stray voltage, data interpretation, and mitigation technology,

Land O'Lakes Closes Minnesota Facility

ARDEN HILLS, Minn.—Land O'Lakes is shutting down its whey production operation at Perham, Minn., Land O'Lakes vice president for Dairy Foods Operations and Supply Chain Fernando Palacios recently announced.

"In today's highly competitive, and consolidating, dairy foods industry, operating efficiency is essential to our ability to effectively serve customers and generate appropriate returns for our member-owners," Palacios said. "Therefore, we are continually evaluating all of our facilities, processes, and policies, with an eye to achieving maximum efficiency.

"Land O'Lakes has a long history in Perham, and this was a very difficult decision," he continued. "However, in terms of industry economics, Land O'Lakes strategic direction, our system's long-term success, and our commitment to serving the interests of our members, this was a very appropriate decision."

When evaluating production facilities, Land O'Lakes looks at a wide range of factors, including plant age and condition, plant capacity and current production levels, overall efficiency, market trends and customer demands, and regional milk supply and milk production trends, Palacios said.

The Perham facility, which was built in 1942, has been operating at less than full capacity, a situation complicated by market trends and the cost of transporting whey to the facility for processing, he explained.

Perham's whey processing volume will be transferred to Land O'Lakes facilities in Pine Island, Minn., Spencer, Wisc., and Kiel, Wisc. Milk procurement and hauling will not be affected, since the Perham plant has not been receiving raw milk.

The plant has forty-six employees and severance packages will be provided. Perham employees will also have the opportunity to pursue available employment opportunities at other facilities within the Land O'Lakes system.

Dairylea, DFA Northeast Council To Host Young Cooperators' Conference

SYRACUSE, NY — Dairylea Cooperative Inc. and the Northeast Area Council of Dairy Farmers of America, Inc. (DFA) announced that this year's Young Cooperators' Conference will take place March 14 - 16, at the Woodlands Inn and Resort in Wilkes-Barre. The annual conference is open to members of Dairylea, DFA, and affiliated cooperatives and their key farm personnel between the ages of 18-40.

The Young Cooperators' Conference is designed to provide members with valuable information, as well as an opportunity to socialize with their peers. Topics for the conference sessions include industry and cooperative updates, cow comfort, farm safety and legislative news.

In addition, speaker and humorist, Jolene Brown will provide entertainment at the banquet and lead an interactive workshop titled, "Top Ten Stupid Things Families Do to Break up Their Farm Operations."

Conference registration is free. The conference kicks off on Friday, March 14, with a pizza party. Informational sessions will begin Saturday morning. Scheduled events conclude on Sunday with lunch. To receive a registration form, or for more information on the conference, call Jan Peterson at (800) 654-8838, extension 5524. The deadline for registration is Feb. 20.

Md. & Va. Co-Op Acquires Maola

RESTON, Va. — Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Cooperative has reached an agreement with North Carolina-based Maola Milk and Ice Cream Company to acquire all of the stock in the 68-year-old independent dairy processor. Maola will retain its name and brand identity and will operate as a separate business of Maryland & Virginia.

Founded in 1935, Maola processes and packages fluid milk, packaged ice cream, ice cream novelties, juice and other drinks at its plant in New Bern, N.C. Maola is the only independent milk processing plant in eastern North Carolina. The plant processes 80,000 gallons of milk per day and 1.5 million gallons of ice cream annually. Maola employs over 400 people in New Bern and 13 distribution centers in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Maryland & Virginia and, previously, Carolina Virginia Milk Producers have supplied Maola for nearly 20 years. In addition, Maryland & Virginia's Marva Maid plant, in Newport News, Va., is strategically located to generate synergies by working closely with Maola. With common customers and overlapping delivery routes, the two operations will

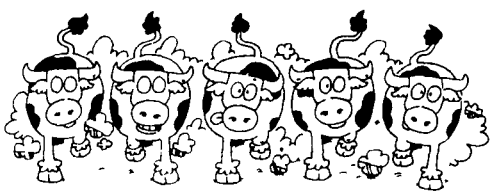
Ohio Scientists Promote Animal Nutrition South Of The Border

WOOSTER, Ohio—Three animal sciences professors with the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center (OARDC) have made a difference for people in the Latin American food-animal industry.

For the past eight years, Bill Weiss, Jeff Firkins, and Don Mahan have taught courses on dairy cattle and swine nutrition at the Escuela Centroamericana de Ganaderia (ECAG), a livestock production technical institute based in the rural community of Atenas, Costa Rica.

"These courses have exposed Latin American professionals to the latest animal production techniques," said Francisco Romero, ECAG general director. "The instructors have shown the highest level of knowledge and experience and have provided us with very useful tools that can be applied to production in the tropics."



The yearly, one-week courses taught by Weiss, Firkins and Mahan are organized by the Latin American Nutrition Center for Continuing Education (LANCE), an initiative of the American Soybean Association funded through the USDA's Foreign Agriculture Service.

"My experience with the people who attend the course has been excellent," said Mahan, who teaches about swine nutrition and management practices. "They are highly motivated and eager to learn. They are also very friendly, intelligent and easy to get to know."

be more efficient, generate more profits, and become more competitive than as single plant operations. Together, Marva Maid and Maola with strong local brand names will be able to more efficiently serve customers over a larger area.

Maryland & Virginia's combined fluid milk processing business will have over $160 million in total sales and nearly 675 employees.

New Report Evaluates Nutrient Management Policy

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.)—As the Pennsylvania Conservation Commission considers changes in its Nutrient Management Act, researchers in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences have issued a report that will help citizens and public decision-makers deliberate the issues, options and future policy directions for nutrient management in the commonwealth.

The report, "Nutrient Management Policy: Pennsylvania Stakeholders' Views About Progress, Challenges, and Future Directions," was written by Charles Abdalla, associate professor of agricultural economics, and Alyssa Dodd, extension associate in agricultural environmental policy.

"This is the first major review of Pennsylvania's Nutrient Management Act regulations since the rules were implemented in 1997," Dodd said. "While detailed proposals for regulatory changes are not known yet, it is important for farmers and others who will be affected by any changes to stay informed about the discussions taking place at the state level and to actively participate in the deliberations when opportunities arise."

"The publication is based on information collected from 28 interviews with knowledgeable people from an array of agencies and organizations," Abdalla said. "Our goal was to identify perspectives about critical nutrient-management issues in the commonwealth and provide a report that contributes to more informed discussions and policy decisions.

"Audiences that will find the report useful include people involved in animal agriculture, such as farmers, agribusinesses, rural residents, public decision-makers and elected officials, and anyone interested in water quality and the environment," Abdalla said.

The report is available on the Penn State Nutrient and Water Policy Update Web site at http://agenvpolicy.aers.psu.edu. The report also can be obtained by calling Abdalla at (814) 865-2562.

Veteran Dairy Team To Lead MDIA

FREDERICK, Md.—Three veteran dairy producers, representing four generations of family dairy production, have been elected to lead the Maryland Dairy Industry Association (MDIA) in 2003.

Robert Ramsburg of Walkersville was elected MDIA president. He is a fourth generation dairy farmer and farm leader, whose 370 acres and 100 Holstein cows provide milk to Dairy Farmers of America (DFA). Ramsburg is a board member of the Frederick County DHIA, life member of the Frederick County Farm Museum, board member of the Frederick County Farm Bureau, former state chairman of the Maryland Farm Bureau Young Farmers, and former Young Cooperator. He succeeds Myron L. Wilhide of Detour as MDIA president.

James (Jimmy) Stup, Jr., also of Walkersville, was elected MDIA first vice-president. Stup's Teabow, Inc. dairy operation has recently expanded to 700 dairy cows, with a new state-of-the-art milking parlor and free-stall barn. The 750-acre third-generation family farm includes a modern manure handling system that sets an example for farming operations in the environmentally sensitive Glade Valley area. Milk is shipped to Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Cooperative Association.

Jeffrey Wivell of Emmitsburg is MDIA second vice-president. His family has been in Maryland dairy production since 1910, and now farms in partnership with three other families, with 500 dairy cows on 400 acres. Milk is shipped to Dairy Farmers of America (DFA).

Boyd Cook, retired executive with Dairymen, Inc., of Boonsboro (Washington County) continues as secretary and ex-officio member of the MDIA Board of Directors.

Also elected to the MDIA Board of Directors are three new decision-makers representing various Maryland geographical areas. New directors include Fonda Rowe, an executive with Tri-State Farm Automation of Hagerstown; Lester C. (Bucky) Jones, Jr., principal of Jones Dairy Service, Inc., Massey (Kent County); and Steve Matthias, regional representative with Agway, Inc. of Westminster (Carroll County).

Genome Sequencing Completed For Major Dairy Cattle Microbe

AMES, Iowa—U.S. Department of Agriculture and University of Minnesota scientists have sequenced the genome of the bacterium that causes Johne's disease, a devastating ailment that primarily afflicts dairy cattle.

The bacterium, Mycobacterium paratuberculosis, is among the biggest threats worldwide to the health of dairy cattle and other ruminant species such as deer and goats.

"This represents a major research breakthrough that could speed the development of new ways to detect and ultimately eliminate Johne's disease," said Undersecretary for Research, Education and Economics Joseph Jen. He chairs the U.S. Interagency Working Group on Domestic Animal Genomics.

Johne's is a chronic and potentially fatal intestinal disorder that brings about severe diarrhea and weight loss in infected cattle. It is found in eight percent of beef herds and 22 percent of dairy herds in the United States.

The sequencing was achieved at two locations: the Agricultural Research Service (ARS) National Animal Disease Center in Ames, Iowa, under microbiologist John P. Bannantine; and the University of Minnesota's Advanced Genetics Analysis Center under the leadership of its director, Vivek Kapur, a faculty member of the university's medical school and College of Veterinary Medicine.

Kapur received a National Research Initiative (NRI) Competitive Grant for the research. NRI grants are administered by USDA's Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service (CSREES).

While CSREES is the extramural research arm of USDA, ARS conducts the department's intramural scientific research.

Kapur said several genes discovered during the sequencing may help differentiate M. paratuberculosis from other closely related bacterial species. "I believe the genomes sequence's availability will provide a much-needed boost to research toward the detection of the disease, the development of vaccines and the ultimate eradication of the disease," he said.

M. paratuberculosis' slow growth—it takes up to six months to identify in laboratory culture—impedes both the diagnosis of infected animals and lab-based research on the microbe. "The genome sequence may enable us to not only to understand why this pathogen grows so slowly, but to identify it more rapidly," said Bannantine.
